The biggest police mystery of all-time?

Exclusive survey reveals county in dark over top job

- Three out of four unaware of crime commissioner election
- Nine out of 10 don't recognise any of the front runners
- Fears voting turnout could be as low as 15 per cent

SPECIAL REPORT by Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

IT is one of the most significant changes to the way our police force is run – but just months before we go to the polls we reveal a shocking ignorance on the role of Kent's new Police and Crime Commissioner.

In an exclusive survey conducted by Archant KOS Media, we can reveal 75 per cent of those quizzed knew nothing about the upcoming elections and more than nine out of ten people had no idea who the main candidates were — even when shown their photographs and names.

We sent teams across the county to quiz people on the street about the role which will govern Kent Police, control its budgets, hire and fire its Chief Constable and have the power to change policing across the county.

But most people surveyed in Medway, Sittingbourne, Tunbridge Wells, Ashford, Canterbury, Hythe, Ramsgate, Dover and Folkestone were left scratching their heads.

So just what is the role of the Police and Crime Commissioner in Kent? And why should you care?

For the full story, survey results and all the information you need to know about how you will be electing the most powerful figure in county policing, see inside.

US SHOOTING

Kent beauty 'horrified' by killer's use of photo

A GLAMOUR model has expressed her disgust at being a pin-up girl for Denver gunman James Holmes.

Former Page 3 model Keeley Hazell, who grew up in Bromley, said she was "horrified" to find the suspected killer had a poster of her on his wall.

Holmes, who is accused of killing 12 and injuring 58 in a shooting at the premiere of Batman film Dark Knight Rises at Aurora cinema in Denver, is seen posing with a poster of the 25-year-old beauty on his profile page of a sex cruising website AdultFriendFinder.

Speaking in The Sun newspaper Miss Hazell said she was horrified.

"It's chilling and has shocked and disgusted me. The whole thing is so weird," she said.

"That picture is from a magazine shoot I did a long while ago and I can't believe such a weirdo has it on his profile page.

"The whole thing is sick — but nothing to what the people of Aurora must be going through.

"My heart goes out to them."

On his profile page, Holmes left a sinister message: "Will you visit me in prison."

The 24-year-old was arrested on Thursday night after the shooting at the cinema in Aurora during a midnight screening of the Batman film.

Councils told to protect vulnerable as benefits cut could see council tax rise

By Chrissie Daniels
chrissie.daniels@archant.co.uk

IN the latest blow to low income households, government funding cuts are forcing local authorities to slash council tax benefits.

The Government is cutting its budget for the benefit by 10 per cent in a bid to save money and passing control of who gets what to local councils.

Councils have been ordered to protect the elderly and vulnerable from the cuts, which in turn means low income households will be hit hardest, this could add more than £20 to their annual bill.

The proposed cuts to the benefit will vary depending on where you live, with Dover, Canterbury and Thanet only reducing the payments to those of working age by five to six per cent whereas Ashford Borough Council is proposing to cut support by 17.5per cent.

Cash-strapped councils will also be given the power to change discounts given for council tax from next year, mainly affecting second home owners and empty properties.

The 10 per cent tax discount given to second homeowners will be reviewed by the local authorities, as will the six month tax-free period for owners of empty homes.

Thanet District Council says its budget will be reduced by approximately £2.2 million, Dover and Canterbury will have £1.5m a year less and Ashford will lose £780,000.

The authorities are running consultations in the coming months to get resident feedback on the proposals.

PILING ON THE MISERY: Councils will have to decide if council tax will rise after the Coalition chose to cut its funding of council tax benefits by 10 per cent

Leader of Thanet council, Clive Hart, said: "At Thanet we're facing a reduction of more than £2m from central government to fund council tax benefit. This means we've had to make some really difficult decisions about who gets financial support, and how much, in order to continue providing this benefit to those on low incomes.

"Working together with the east Kent councils, we're proposing a scheme that reduces the impact on benefit customers by removing some council tax discounts and exemptions as well as cutting benefit awards.

"This will help to reduce the overall financial impact on benefit reductions to working age people, however working age council tax benefit claimants will still have to pay more council tax than they have before."

Ashford councillor Robert Taylor, portfolio holder for core services, said: "This shortage in funding means the council will have to make some difficult decisions about who gets financial support and how much in the future."

A spokesman for Kent County Council said: "Having less money to fund council tax benefit in future will leave all local councils, including the police and fire authorities as well as the county and district councils, with a serious challenge.

"KCC has already embarked on early planning and discussion with district and borough councils across the county, and is working closely with the police and fire authorities to ensure common interests are taken into account."

BOOKS

Author tweets to ensure you haven't Loss De Plott

By Dean Kilpatrick
dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

AN author has decided on an unusual approach to pique a potential reader's interest – by using social networking website Twitter to 'tweet' his entire book, 140 characters at a time.

Stephan Myers, 46, from Ashford is publishing bite-sized chunks of his first book every day and says it is already proving a big success.

He hopes the project will help to encourage people to interact with the text, and has so far accumulated 3,000 followers.

The book, entitled Loss De Plott, is about his corporate background and focuses on the relationship between the narrator and the main character Loss. It was published two weeks ago.

Mr Myers said: "I am something of a technophobe and I am still a little on the fence about social media. I wanted to test my market and Twitter was an ideal arena.

EXPERIENCE: Loss De Plott's story is being shared on Twitter

"What I could do was release it slowly and get some feedback before I decided to publish. It's a good interactive media, and the amount of interaction from readers and authors is great."

Although the book is now published, Mr Myers is continuing to tweet, with the 88-page novel set to take the rest of the year to tweet out.

It is all a long way from his previous career in human resources.

He added: "It was now or never really. I am putting the corporate side on hold for a couple of years and I have decided to draw a line in the sand and follow my gut instinct and do something I enjoy."

The author, who has lived in Ashford for 10 years, has a seven book series planned for his character Loss de Plott, who has been developed by experiences of his own life.

He said: "Having worked in human resources for 20 years, you see the good in people and the bad, and you tend to look at the more vulnerable types in a corporate environment.

"Loss represents vulnerability in society as a whole. She takes the narrator from a place where there is no authenticity; there is money, but he hasn't really achieved what he wanted in life.

"But through meeting these different characters he then realises he is on the wrong path and has the opportunity to change that."

You can read his daily instalments of the book by searching @stephanjmyers on Twitter, or visit www.lossdeplott.com for more about the book and where to buy.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Dad killed his own son

A 22-year-old has been jailed for five years after being found guilty of the manslaughter of his four-month-old son Mackenzie last year.

Wayne Acott was found guilty at Maidstone Crown Court. Medical reports said the child had been either struck or shaken, dying as a result of trauma to his head. Doctors said his injuries were usually associated with a high-speed car accident.

Cat savagely beaten

A BELOVED pet cat had to be put down after being savagely attacked as he snoozed on the drive of a house in Tenterden.

Police and RSPCA officers are now hunting a gang of four youths after been seen near where the cat, Buzz Lightyear, 13, was left with internal bleeding and broken bones. The youngsters are believed to be as young as 11. Anyone with information should contact police.

Online A&E wait times

TWO of Kent's major hospitals have introduced a way to check waiting times at their accident and emergency departments online.

The Tunbridge Wells Hospital at Pembury and the Maidstone Hospital hope by providing real-time updates on their websites, patients will be able to make an informed choice as to where to go and whether they could seek treatment elsewhere, such as a minor injury unit or GP.

See www.mtw.nhs.uk for details of the queues at the two hospitals.

REGENERATION

Ashford gets the nod from retail guru Mary Portas

ASHFORD MP Damian Green says the town must use its selection as one of the 15 new Portas Pilot towns as a "springboard" to success.

It was named on Wednesday as being one of the towns selected to benefit from expert advice provided by a team lead by retail guru Mary Portas, pictured.

She has been given a cash-pot to share with town centres in a bid to find a solution to the problems faced by many due to the rise in out-of-town complexes and internet retailers.

While funding is likely to be modest, the advice is likely to be invaluable.

Peter Wood, leader of Ashford Borough Council, said: "Our town is bursting with potential, our hard-working businesses and residents deserve the support – and the national recognition – that this scheme will bring.

"We believe that, with high speed services and a regenerated town, Ashford is heading firmly in the right direction and the support we will receive as a result of this success will help to enhance the opportunities available to us and move the town centre to a stronger and more vibrant level."

Local Conservative MP, and senior Tory, Damian Green, said: "This is great news for Ashford and shows what we can do when the whole town pulls together. We must use this as a springboard to take the town centre to a new level."

The bid was highlighted for its innovative proposals and the way it embraced new technology as well as providing a good case study for other towns to follow.

Ashford's plans include using more innovative ideas to revitalise the market and make it a destination point for shoppers, developing a virtual high street and smartphone app to guide shoppers through the town, and creating stronger links between the town centre and the popular Ashford Designer Outlet.

The bid was accompanied by 50 letters of support from businesses, and a petition backing the bid signed by 165 town centre retailers.

Ashford re-submitted its bid in June, after not being selected in the first round.

The chosen towns get a share of a £1.5million funding pot, and invaluable national support and guidance on revitalising their town centres. The £100,000 from government will also be match-funded by an additional £100,000 from contributions through the planning agreements to revitalise the town centre.

The 14 other towns chosen this week were: Berwick-upon-Tweed, Braintree, Brighton, Hatfield, Leamington, Liverpool, Loughborough, Lowestoft, Morecambe, Rotherham, Tiverton as well as the London boroughs of Lambeth, Lewisham and Tower Hamlets.

Dartford and Margate were both named among the initial towns chosen to benefit from the advice.

CRIME

As crime figures fall, sharp spike in sex offences re-opens SARC debate

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

SERIOUS sexual offences have risen by 10 per cent in the last year with Kent Police putting the rise down to the number of victims coming forward to report historic abuse.

While the latest Home Office statistics show crime in general in the county is continuing to fall with a 3.6 per cent drop – 3,845 less crimes – on last year, more than 1,070 of the most serious sexual offences, such as rape, were reported;100 more than in 2010/11 and amounting to around 20 a week.

Kent Police said this was due to an increase in the reporting of historic sexual abuse as well as improved support services to victims of domestic abuse. Assistant Chief Constable Paul Brandon said tackling sexual offences continued to be a priority for the force.

Malcolm Gilbert, operations director at Gravesend-based charity Family Matters, one of the country's leading rape crisis centres, agreed there had been an increase in reporting of historic abuse.

But he said this was because there had been a "chronic under-reporting" through the years and the problem had been previously hidden and ignored.

He said: "Society and its institutions has swept this issue under the carpet in a unwritten code of silence with sexual abuse victims disbelieved, prevalence rates scorned and resources not allocated,

"Encouraged by high profile cases involving the priesthood, more and more victims of historic sexual abuse are and will come forward.

"However, considering the numbers of abuse victims that have amassed over the years of silence, this still represents the tip of a very large iceberg.

"If we are serious about this issue we must, as a society – and that means all our politicians, local, regional and national, and our statutory providers – send a message to abuse victims that they are encouraged to report."

But Mr Gilbert said the message was not being sent out in Kent, the only county in the south east without a 24/7 Sexual Assault Referral Centre (SARC), a suite staffed around-the-clock by trained crisis workers, independent from the police, to deal with the aftermath of an assault.

"At present there is no facility for a rape victim to self-refer without first engaging the police; an option many women choose not to do," he said.

"As a consequence those that do not wish to report to police their assault are forced to suffer in silence and cannot access morning-after pills, proper forensic examination and storage of DNA or receive post-assault HIV prophylactics.

"With this facility as our flagship we can expect greater numbers of historic and current abuse and rape victims coming forward to seek redress through the criminal justice system."

Darent Valley Hospital in Dartford has a SARC suite, but this is only open Monday to Friday 9am-4pm. It means for victims assaulted at a weekend or night time, they have to leave a message on an answer phone and wait for someone to get back to them.

Calls have been made for a 24/7 SARC to be opened in other areas to reduce the long journeys traumatised victims have to make to Dartford.

The latest Home Office figures show Kent overall has seen a steady reduction in crime since 2005/06.

Assistant Chief Constable Brandon stressed Kent was a safe county and that the force would continue to work with partner agencies and residents to reduce crime and target people who break the law.

"We know where we need to focus and reducing burglary and sexual offences continues to be a priority," he said.

Violent crime saw a 2.4 per cent drop (545 less crimes) this year since 2010/11 and vehicle crime a 16.2 per cent reduction (1,855 less crimes).

Criminal damage was also down, by 7.7 per cent (1,643 less). But burglary was up two per cent (239 more crimes) and robbery by 10.4 per cent (90 more crimes).

Assistant Chief Constable Brandon said: "Kent Police continues to perform well and it is encouraging to see that overall crime is falling.

"Modern day policing has faced a number of significant challenges. Despite this Kent has been adaptable and responsive to these changes whilst continuing to deliver a quality service to the community and further reduce crime."

COMPULSORY LIE DETECTOR TESTS FOR OFFENDERS

SEX offenders leaving prison will have to take lie detector tests following a successful pilot scheme carried out by the University of Kent.

Researchers found overwhelming evidence that offenders monitored with polygraph testing made more disclosures about their risk.

Government ministers are now looking to roll mandatory testing nationwide.

The pilot scheme, led by Dr Theresa Gannon and Dr Jane Wood at the university, looked at the use of lie detector tests to increase disclosures made by sex offenders released from prison to probation staff.

Dr Gannon said: "Those taking part in the pilot project made more disclosures about entering an exclusion zone or contact with children than sex offenders supervised under normal probation conditions.

"We found the polygraph pilot was effective for a whole range of sex offenders, and perhaps most significantly, sex offenders themselves reported finding the polygraph useful for helping them to manage their behaviour in the future."

Shocking survey results reveal an alarming lack of interest in vote to select £85,000 police supremo

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

IT'S been hailed as the biggest shake-up to policing in 50 years; giving the public the chance to select the person who will play a key part in how our county is policed and assuming a powerful, high-profile role.

As well as pocketing an expected £85,000 salary.

But shocking findings have exposed how little the people of Kent know about the Police and Crime Commissioner election later this year.

In an exclusive survey by this newspaper, our reporters took to the streets armed with pictures of the three main candidates in the Police and Crime Commissioner race – Conservative candidate Craig Mackinlay, Labour's Harriet Yeo and independent candidate Ann Barnes – and a set of questions looking to find out how much people actually know.

Worryingly, from the hundreds we quizzed, our figures revealed a staggering 75 per cent knew nothing about the November election at all.

And when shown pictures of the main contenders, a massive 91 per cent had no clue as to who they were; 89 per cent still left scratching their heads when we told them the candidates names too.

One thought Mr Mackinlay – a Medway councillor – was one of the dragons from the BBC2 series Dragon's Den or actor Kenneth Branagh, and another mistook Mrs Barnes for transport minister Theresa Villiers.

Another worrying statistic was the high number of people who said they would not be going to the polls on November 15 to vote in the county's first PCC election.

Many stressed this was due to the lack of information available and not knowing enough about the process.

The PCC is being introduced by the Home Office to replace police authorities and the Government department is expected to launch a campaign after the Olympics.

It will mean the dissolution of the existing Kent Police Authority.

Our findings would suggest the campaign is going to need to be extravagant.

Ian Pointon, chair of the Kent Police Federation, which represents police officers, said he was not surprised at the lack of knowledge about the PCC, but that this was likely to improve closer to the election.

"I think this is something very much led on a Whitehall level, but I think people will become more informed with time," he said.

"But I don't know how many people will turn out on a cold November day to cast a vote on something they don't know too much about."

Mr Mackinlay confirmed there would be a campaign by the Home Office in late September to raise the profile.

"I think it's also up to the candidates to do this," he said.

"It's not quite sinking in at the moment. People are familiar with other elections, but because this is a new election, people don't know about it yet.

"It's a stand-alone election which I am sure the whole country will get involved with."

Asked how he felt about not being recognised in our survey, he said: "I hope people in Medway might have seen me smiling a bit more, but I am not surprised at this stage of the game.

"Kent is a vast location and it's up to me to get around to see the people."

His rival Ms Yeo, an Ashford councillor, said she wasn't offended people didn't know who she was and was working on a major campaign to raise the profile of the PCC.

"I've got an idea I'm working on that will involve reaching out to lots of people.

"I'm looking at hosting debates later this year and contacting young people through social networking," she said.

"This election is about giving people a voice and it's very important they get involved.

"There is a lot of vagueness about it at the moment; people don't know who the candidates are and so I'm not offended they don't know who I am. Part of my job is to get out there and inform them."

Mrs Barnes, who was most recognisable in the survey due to her being the current chair of the Kent Police Authority, said she is getting ready to take to the streets in a series of road shows to get the message out there.

"This is a new role and people are starting to learn about it," she said.

"They need to know so they can understand the ramifications if they make the wrong choice in the election and how important this is.

"I wasn't for PCCs being introduced, and now I have no other choice but to stand and make sure people make the right choice."

Mrs Barnes said it was harder for independent candidates to get the word out there as the Government was not providing free postage to the electorate as they do in the General Election and council polls.

Mrs Barnes declared her intention to run this week. Speaking earlier this week, she feared turn-out for the election could be as low as just 15 per cent.

■ For details on the existing Kent Police Authority and what the PCC role entails, as well as a full list of candidates, see the panels above.

YOUR GUIDE TO THE POLICE & CRIME COMMISSIONER

THE county's Police and Crime Commissioner will replace the Kent Police Authority following an election open to everyone on the electoral register on November 15.

It will take the same form as that of a local council or General Election and there will be candidates from political parties as well as independents standing. So who does what?

Kent Police Authority (in place until Nov 2012):

- Monitors Kent Police to ensure it is value for money and provides a good service
- Provides the force with staff, buildings, equipment and facilities
- Appoints the Chief Constable and senior officers
- Sets the budget for the force as well as targets
- Monitors performance
- Makes sure community priorities determine policing
- Members chosen through a recruitment process or local council

But the Coalition Government has decided to scrap police authorities and instead introduce the PCC in an effort, it says, to provide stronger and more transparent accountability to the force.

The Police and Crime Commissioner will:

- Be elected by the public in November at polling stations and through postal votes
- Hold the Chief Constable to account for the delivery of the force
- Set the force's budget and precept
- Set and update a police and crime plan
- Engage with communities
- Hire and fire the Chief Constable
- Aim to cut crime and deliver an effective police service
- The Chief Constable, however, will retain the direction and control of the force's officers and staff.

LONDON 2012

CENTRE OF ATTENTION: Kent's many commuters will face severe road and rail disruption as thousands of visitors descend on London for the 2012 Games

As Games start, commuters warned Monday will be hell on rail and roads

By Chris Britcher
chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

WHILE excitement over the Olympics reaches a peak this weekend, commuters are bracing themselves for a taste of travel chaos like no other this week, as the rail and road networks prepare for a huge surge in the number of users.

And rail commuters are being warned this Monday is set to be one of the busiest days of all, with an extra 50,000 using the rail network to reach equestrian events being staged at Greenwich Park in addition to events taking place at the Olympic Park in Stratford.

Train operator Southeastern say the crowds will be so large there will be no access to London Bridge station for platforms one to six during the peak rush hour times of 6pm to 10pm.

Passengers will only be able to exit the station which is expected to be one of the busiest terminals throughout the Games.

It is, therefore, advising all passengers to pick up services back into Kent from Cannon Street, Charing Cross, Victoria or Waterloo East instead.

Alison Nolan, from Southeastern, said: "From this weekend, our services will be extremely busy, so we hope by now people are starting to think about their travel options during the Games.

"While we're running the maximum number of trains possible, putting on longer carriages and a new timetable, services will still be really busy.

"Queues are to be expected at many London terminal stations.

"Our advice is to allow enough time to travel and consider re-timing your journeys to avoid the busiest times on the network."

Southeastern anticipates a significant increase of around a quarter of the daily number of users as people use public transport to reach the Games.

It says it expects to carry around 110,000 extra passengers a day during the three-week Olympics while experts estimate 300,000 extra vehicles on our roads.

Users of the high-speed services between Kent and Stratford International are advised to check timetables closely, as many services are being cut during the Games, with trains acting as a shuttle service between St Pancras International and Stratford.

Meanwhile, on the roads, all key routes into London will be busier than usual, with particular hotspots leading towards the Blackwall Tunnel and Dartford Crossing. Motorists are advised to allow plenty of extra time for their journeys especially during peak times.

Copper's perfect beat

A DANCING Kent police officer has proved to be an online hit as he entertained crowds lining the Sevenoaks' route of the Olympic torch last week.

Motorcycle officer PC Matt Townsend was cheered as his routine began with some robotic dance moves before he began to hop around on one leg.

Encouraged by the crowd's reaction, he then attempted break-dancing before finishing with an energetic hip thrust.

His antics were captured and uploaded onto YouTube where it has racked up nearly 200,000 hits.

Launderette prepared to clean up its act if 'brand police' come calling

A FOLKESTONE launderette is defying the rules on London 2012 branding by proudly displaying the Olympic Rings.

The Leas Laundrette has the symbol painted on its window along with a message of support for Team GB.

And owner Linda Baker said she does not anticipate any problems from what has been dubbed the 'Olympics brand police'. This group of lawyers and enforcement officers, have clamped down on small businesses using key words such as Olympic, 2012, London, medals and gold, and the use of the Olympic Rings and all official logos, in promotional material.

It is designed to protect the big-spending sponsors who have secured exclusivity on using the officialm marks, but has come in for huge criticism from businesses falling foul of the laws.

Mrs Baker said: "We thought someone might say something during the torch relay and if they had done we'd have removed everything.

"But no official said a word."

The messages and logos will now stay up for the duration of the London 2012 Games.

Mrs Baker said: "Many people have said how great it is. We have had our customers remarking on it and people stop and look as they walk by. Some even come in with messages of support."

This week, London Mayor Boris Johnson called for commonsense to override a heavy-handed approach to any infringement.

He said: "I think this is an area where you mustn't allow any kind of insanity."

The Olympic Delivery Authority said rules would be enforced in "a reasonable and proportionate way".

Dementia: A 'time-bomb' we must shout about

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

MEMORY WALK: From left, Katie Ives and Lorraine Summers will be raising awareness of dementia with an event at Leeds Castle

THE daughter of parents both struck down with dementia has given a heartbreaking insight into the condition in the hope it will make more people understand the disease.

In a poignant account about her own experience, Lorraine Summers, from Lenham, said people too often "stick their heads in the sand".

The 58-year-old has watched her grandfather, father and now mother struggle with dementia, also known as Alzheimer's, which causes memory loss, confusion and mood and communication problems.

The Alzheimer's Society said by 2021 some 30,000 people in Kent will have the disease – 9,000 more than today.

"It's going to happen to more people as the population grows and people live longer," said Ms Summers.

"It can be a ticking time bomb. We need to raise awareness, we need to shout about this and make people listen.

"Dementia isn't fashionable. When you see pictures of a sick child or animal, people say how sad that is, but with the elderly and with a disease like dementia, you don't get the same reaction."

And she should know, having seen three close family members go through it.

First it was her grandfather when he was 76.

"We became aware there was something not right when he got lost on the M25. He just carried on driving around and around and couldn't work out what to do.

"It gradually progressed from there. He knew there was something wrong, it was very difficult for him."

But it was in more recent years when her own father was diagnosed that the real heartache began.

"About six years ago my Dad had to have an operation on his spine, it wasn't successful and he ended up in a wheelchair. He then had his leg amputated. The beginnings of vascular dementia then started, which is caused by restricted blood flow to the brain.

"In January 2011 he had a stroke and it just catapulted the dementia. It went from mild to severe.

"He was having hallucinations, he didn't know who he was. My dad was a gentleman and very respectful, I'd never heard him shout, but after that he was screaming and shouting – I couldn't believe that voice."

Her father was moved to Ashminster House in Ashford, where he received support for dementia.

"To see a man reduced to a baby, lying in bed in pads, it's just awful. The whole experience was horrendous."

Ms Summers' father passed away in June last year, but the sorrow was set to continue as early signs of dementia started to worsen in her mother.

"She had mild dementia before my father died but she was focused on him and making sure he was okay – as a couple they were so dependent on each other," she said.

But since his death things have gradually worsened and her mother, 81, is due to go into a home at the end of this year.

"She wants to stay in her own home in Hawkinge but she is really struggling.

"I want to keep her there as long as possible and I'm there for her as much as I can be, but when I'm not it's very difficult.

"She was such a smart woman but she puts on the same clothes every day now, she wears woolly tights even though it's hot and she doesn't do her hair.

"She'll put things in the microwave and forget about it and then find it the next day and heat it up and eat it so she gets sick.

"She even flagged down a car to give her a lift from the shops. It's very worrying when I'm not there."

To raise awareness of the condition, Ms Summers is launching an Alzheimer's Society charity walk at Leeds Castle in September.

Called the Memory Walk and held in partnership with Bupa Care, the event takes place on September 30, at 10am, to raise money to help support sufferers and their carers in the area.

Katie Ives from Bupa's Warren Lodge Care Home in Ashford said: "Many people have heard of dementia but know very little about it, until it touches their lives."

Royal Mail figures reveal huge rise in dog attacks on delivery workers

By Dean Kilpatrick
dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

THE number of dog attacks on postmen and women in the past year have soared – with part of Kent seeing an increase in excess of 50 per cent.

According to Royal Mail's latest figures its staff are under attack from over-protective pets.

In the area covered by the TN postcode – Tunbridge Wells, Sevenoaks, Tonbridge and Ashford – 75 delivery workers were attacked between April 2011 and April 2012, a rise of 53 per cent on the previous period.

The CT postcode covering Canterbury, Thanet, Dover and Folkestone, however, saw 18 incidents – a 14 per cent drop; the Medway towns (ME) had 37 attacks (up nine per cent); and Dartford and Gravesend (DA), had 19 reported problems (up 12 per cent).

DOG ATTACK FIGURES
April 2011-April 2012

TN postcode: 75 attacks (+53 per cent)
CT postcode: 18 attacks (-14 per cent)
ME postcode: 37 attacks (+9 per cent)
DA postcode: 19 attacks (+12 per cent)

Now there are fears the rate of attacks will increase in the summer as dogs are left unsupervised in the garden as parents focus on children.

Communications Workers Union health and safety officer Dave Joyce said: "The age-old image of the dog attacking the postman is not a laughing matter. Thousands of our members are bitten every year and hundreds suffer debilitating injuries which leave them with physical and psychological scarring."

The figures show an increase in dog attacks nationally, and Royal Mail has expressed its concern about the upward trend.

Tom O'Kane, director of safety for Royal Mail in the south east, said: "Clearly, most dogs are not inherently dangerous. However, even the most placid animal can be prone to attack if it feels its territory is being threatened.

"The number of attacks is unacceptably high. Even just being threatened by an unrestrained pet is a frightening situation for our delivery staff and we would appeal to owners to keep their pets under control."

Royal Mail has asked its customers to consider any danger its staff may face if they have a dog, and has issued tips including keeping dogs away from mailboxes or putting them in cages around delivery time.

Antiques Roadshow to visit Historic Dockyard

By Chris Britcher
chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

IT'S time to rummage through your loft and polish up the silver – the BBC's ever-popular Antiques Roadshow is coming to town and wants you and your heirlooms to pay it a visit.

Now in its 35th series, presenter Fiona Bruce will be fronting the show when it films in the grounds of the Historic Dockyard on Thursday, September 6.

Some of Britain's leading antiques and fine arts specialists will be on hand to offer free advice and valuations to visitors, who are invited to raid their attics and bring along their family heirlooms, household treasures and car boot bargains for inspection by the experts.

The last series, watched by an average of six million viewers, included some amazing finds such as a painting by Rolf Harris bought for £50 and valued at £50,000; a beer flagon made from Oliver Cromwell's horse; the medical chest taken on Shackleton's 1914 expedition to the Antarctic; and a toilet roll which was rejected by the Beatles at the Abbey Road Studios.

Series editor Simon Shaw says: "The team are all looking forward to visiting Chatham. It's always exciting to see what will come to light.

"We regularly see between 1,500 and 2,000 visitors on the day. Despite the high turnout, everyone will get to see an expert."

The Chatham event will see doors open at 9.30am and close at 4.30pm. Entry to the show is free. People with large pieces of furniture or other big items can send details and photographs of their objects to: Antiques Roadshow, BBC, Whiteladies Road, Bristol BS8 2LR or email them to antiques.roadshow@bbc.co.uk.

Producers say it may be possible to arrange to look at the item in advance and organise transportation to the venue.

Ms Bruce is now in her fifth year presenting the show.

She said: "Presenting the Antiques Roadshow is, for me, one of those rare and very lucky coincidences in television when you get to work on a show that you already love to watch.

"Exploring the human story behind every object is what makes Antiques Roadshow so fascinating. And everyone loves the agony and ecstasy of the 'what's it worth?' moment.

"The AR isn't just about antiques; it's history, beauty and drama all wrapped up in one."

Scientists investigate the decline of starlings

By Chris Britcher
chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

FEARS over the future of one of the country's best-known birds are growing as their numbers are continuing to drop dramatically, leaving experts baffled.

Over the past two decades, the number of starlings in Kent have declined by 69 per cent. Across the European Union, some 40 million starlings have disappeared since 1980.

Now steps are being taken to try and halt the decline, with the RSPB leading a research project in a bid to pinpoint why UK flocks are in such freefall.

In 2002, the starling was added to the UK 'red list' for 'birds of conservation concern', because its population had halved during the previous three decades.

Each winter, birds arriving from continental Europe boost the UK's starling numbers. There is evidence of a decline in the number of starlings visiting the UK, which could be linked to the decline elsewhere.

NOT SO COMMON: Starlings are on the conservation 'red list'

The RSPB's Dr Richard Gregory heads up the society's bird monitoring section. He explained: "The starling is still a plentiful bird, but its numbers are falling alarmingly.

"Records show that we have lost more starlings across Europe than any other farmland bird. Forty million starlings lost represents more than 150 for every hour since the 1980s.

"This should be a wake-up call, because we ignore the decline of nature at our peril."

Starling numbers recorded in the RSPB's annual Big Garden Birdwatch have fallen by 80 per cent since 1979. While they are still the second most recorded bird in Kent, this year an average of 4.5 birds were seen per garden, compared to 12 in 1991.

Dr Will Peach, who is leading the UK research into the starling decline, said: "Figures like these have convinced us of the need for action."

There have been several theories put forward to explain the starling's decline. In parts of Europe, suggestions include the loss of grassland through conversion to forestry and the growing of crops. But these changes haven't affected the UK in the same way, so the reasons for the rapid contraction here are not understood.

RSPB researchers will be working with farmers to examine whether there is sufficient food and nesting sites for starlings in livestock areas.

FORMER BBC weather presenter Kaddy Lee Preston will be the special star turn and guest speaker at an event in Margate in September.

The broadcaster, who quit her role on BBC South East Today earlier this year, will be hosting a gourmet night at the Salmestone Grange on September 1.

The 'Dine with Kaddy Lee Preston' event will see the presenter reveal stories from her career, as well as signing autographs and posing for photographs after the meal.

William Whelan, the venue's owner, added "We are so thrilled that Kaddy will be joining us. I'm looking forward to some great company and lively conversation from one of our favourite TV personalities."

CRASH

Driver killed in car smash

A MOTORIST was killed after a road smash in Sevenoaks last weekend.

The victim was the driver of a red Mazda MX5 which hit a grey Vauxhall Vectra outside the Sainsbury's supermarket in Otford Road at around 12.50pm.

The driver was pronounced dead at the scene. The driver of the other car was not seriously injured.

FIRE

Harvester fire sparks alert

FIVE fire engines and dozens of firefighters tackled a blazing combine harvester after it caught alight in a field near Sandwich on Monday.

Crews were called to the fire in Hammill Road, Woodnesborough, at around 3.10pm. As teams tackled the fire on the machinery, others ringed the field to prevent the blaze from spreading. It took more than four hours to control the fire.

£5,000 reward up for grabs after crook swipes rare Zulu war medals

By Dean Kilpatrick
dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

TWO rare medals presented during the Zulu War over 100 years ago have been pinched by an apparent expert in the era.

The two medals were swiped from the home of a member of a Zulu historical group in Woodchurch Road, Tenterden.

The crook had visited the home as an expert on the war which took place in South Africa in 1879.

He is described as white, aged 50 to 60 years old and was very smartly dressed wearing smart brown shoes.

Chairman of the Anglo Zulu War Historical Society, Dr Adrian Greeves, said: "They are both classed as A medals, but they have no market value because everyone know's they have been stolen.

"What anyone could do with them except for sit in a dark room and gloat about it to themselves, I don't know."

Dr Greeves only recently noticed them missing, and said the sentimental value of the items was significant and he would like them returned.

He added: "They were given to me by a dear friend and he was murdered three years ago so it is all I have from him."

A £5,000 reward has been offered for the return of the medals. Anyone with information should contact PC Philip Butcher on 101.

CONSERVATION

Join the stars and help protect our white cliffs

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

DAME Judi Dench, soul singer Joss Stone and wartime sweetheart Dame Vera Lynn are three of a long list of celebrities throwing their weight behind a National Trust campaign to buy a stretch of the famous White Cliffs of Dover.

The charity already looks after and manages the landmark, with the exception of a 1.35km stretch – arguably the most iconic part.

National Trust bosses say to acquire it will complete the "missing link" and allow them to protect the cliffs for future generations. But they need the public's help, and last month launched a £1.2 million fundraising campaign.

Director-general of the National Trust, Fiona Reynolds, said in just one month thousands of people backed the appeal and almost half of the money needed has been raised.

Now a host of celebrities have thrown their weight behind the campaign, hoping it will give the vital push to reach the £1.2m target.

The money has to be raised by the end of the year for the National Trust to acquire the cliff stretch.

Iconic wartime singer Dame Vera Lynn said she supported the appeal to ensure the cliffs are protected in their entirety.

"The sight of them meant so much to returning servicemen during the wars, and they continue to be a huge part of the history of this island, as they always have been," she said.

Bond actor Dame Judi Dench added: "Whenever I see the White Cliffs of Dover, I think of the Matthew Arnold poem Dover Beach: The cliffs of England stand glimmering and vast, out in the tranquil bay."

Other faces to have lent their support are actor Richard E Grant, fashion designer Zandra Rhodes, yachtswoman Dame Ellen MacArthur, TV presenter Tony Robinson and comedian Paul O'Grady.

Mr O'Grady, who lives in Aldington, said: "For the past 14 years Kent has been my home and I've come to really love the peace and quiet of the countryside.

"The white cliffs are Kent's most famous and stunning landscape and have a very special place in many of our hearts. I'm backing the National Trust appeal so the cliffs will be safe forever, for all of us – I urge everyone out there to do the same."

The trust said it was important the charity took over the 1.35km sweep between the visitor centre and South Foreland lighthouse which overlooks the port.

It is the only part of the five mile stretch to remain in private hands.

The charity said this leaves it at risk of inappropriate development in the future.

DEVELOPMENT

Protestors vow to stop 'Son of KIG'

GREEN activists have vowed to fight what they are calling "Son of KIG" after recommendations were submitted to develop on land previously outlined for the quashed Kent International Gateway.

The controversial proposal, which was refused in 2010, was for a road-to-rail freight depot near junction eight of the M20, at Bearsted.

Thousands of protesters celebrated when the plans were turned down, but now it looks as though the fight is back on, with part of the precious land outlined as a potential site for an industrial park.

Maidstone Green Party called the latest proposal "Son of KIG". If given the go ahead it would cover a quarter of the 25 hectare site, which is located in the Kent Downs Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty.

In a report to Tory-run Maidstone Borough Council's cabinet on Wednesday, planning officers stated that to use Woodcut Farm – part of the previous KIG site – would have a substantial impact on the landscape.

It was also stated that wildlife would be affected. But officers outlined it as a potential site for employment development and a public consultation could be held. No firm plans have been received.

However, Maidstone council's scrutiny committee voted on Tuesday to drop the site from any plans.

This was echoed by the Green Party, which vowed to fight any proposals.

Ciaran Oliver from Maidstone Green Party said people in Bearsted felt betrayed by the council: "There is a real sense of shock that the council can spend £2m fighting an industrial park development in 2009 only to propose a similar one three years later. Their support for the StopKIG campaign now seems like hollow electioneering. This industrial park must not be allowed to go ahead. Maidstone Greens will be in the front line of the fight to stop it."

Greens: Replace airports with leisure centres

By Dean Kilpatrick
dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

AIRPORTS in Kent should be shut down and converted into leisure centres, according to dramatic proposals put forward by Kent Green Party.

It says it is opposed to suggestions of regional airports being expanded, and alternative uses of Manston and Lydd airports should be looked at.

However, their proposals have been dismissed as "pie in the sky" by a leading MP.

Greens spokesman Steve Dawe said: "Kent Green Party has made its opposition to airport expansion very clear through campaigning and submissions in recent years.

"We emphasise that Lydd and Manston should be converted to all-weather leisure centres as a boost to employment in these areas, and also to build up the domestic tourism offer of the east Kent area.

"Why does our Government want to favour people flying abroad for holidays rather than building up the quality of domestic tourism instead?"

Manston is regularly stated as an alternative to a proposed Thames Estuary airport, despite a recent history which has seen it struggle to persuade operators to persevere with the site.

Thanet North MP Sir Roger Gale insists Kent Green Party's plans are wide of the mark.

He said: "Curious, in this context, that it is the Green Party that has its head in the clouds while those of us who want to see Manston succeed have our feet planted firmly on the ground.

"Instead of backing the job-creating potential of Manston and recognising the importance of aviation in the south east to the national economy, the Green Party wants Manston and Lydd to be converted into all-weather leisure centres."

Chief executive of Manston Airport, Charles Buchanan, said: "Thanet is increasingly well served in terms of visitor attractions and making great strides in strengthening its visitor economy, thanks to the likes of the Turner Contemporary.

"What Kent needs is improved accessibility to help attract more high spending inbound visitors, and this would be delivered by a successful airport, and not as the Green Party has suggested doing by converting Manston, or Lydd for that matter, to 'all-weather leisure centres'."

However, campaigners against the expansion of Lydd Airport believe the proposals need to be considered, but the risks should also be assessed.

Louise Barton, of the Lydd Airport Action Group, said: "I am in favour of anything that brings tourism into the area because it is an ideal industry.

"I am not sure how practical a large leisure centre is though. What we want to see is walking and cycling in the marshes, with visitor numbers in the surrounding areas.

"In theory, I am in favour, but it may not be easy just because of the nature of the beast."

The government is currently welcoming responses to its draft aviation policy framework, with the consultation closing on October 31.

POSSIBILITY: Campaigners against the expansion of Lydd Airport say the leisure centre idea should be looked into

TECHNOLOGY

Radar boost to help jets as they fly above sea windfarms

UPGRADE: Charles Buchanan, Manston Airport chief executive, and Clive Hart, leader of Thanet District Council, with the airport's new radar

A MULTI-million pound high-tech radar system at Manston Airport this week went live.

It is hoped the investment will future-proof the airport's growth and development in passenger and freight services.

Crucially, the new system is able to distinguish between aircraft and the large off-shore wind turbines, which can confuse existing radar.

A spokesman for the airport explained: "Rotating wind turbines can look similar to a moving aircraft on the air traffic controller's display.

"By using a secondary radar, which communicates with a transponder fitted on aircraft, other radar images can be removed and the planes controlled safely as they fly above the wind farms."

Leader of Thanet District Council, Clive Hart, was on hand to witness the unveiling.

He said: "This is a clear example of how embracing new technology allows different industries to exist side by side.

"This is great news for Manston and the whole of east Kent and demonstrates we are open for business."

To ensure the air space over the wind farms operates safely, the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) has instructed that no aircraft, unless fitted with a transponder, will be able to fly in the vicinity of the two wind farms.

MAN ON A MISSION: Cookie was held in high esteem by the people of Folkestone, where he is buried

Unusual final resting place of a smuggler's son who turned to God

By Nick Ames
nick.ames@archant.co.uk

IT IS perhaps one of the most dramatic and unusual grave stones in the county and marks the final resting place of one of Folkestone's most colourful characters.

Sited in the large cemetery along Cheriton Road, the grave could be mistaken for a collection of stone and rusty metal.

But on close examination, it takes the form of a rock with a broken ship's mast rising from it, an anchor and chain, an open book and a stone hat.

And it is perched above the remains of mariner and preacher William Cook.

Cookie, as he was known, lived for many years in a small cottage on Dover Hill and was an enormously popular figure, with his name and deeds celebrated in song, prose and verse among the residents of his hometown.

The son of a smuggler, who died in a shipwreck, Cookie was born in 1815, and after some time at sea he turned to preaching.

He was active in the Temperance Movement which was against the drinking of alcohol.

Cookie would sing the following verse at his sermons – roaring the last line at the top of his voice.

"We throw down the bottle and the glass, Pick up the pledge book and pen, And sign, sign, sign, To be a sober man."

As well as preaching, Cookie would supply religious books to children and ships which called at Folkestone Harbour.

His addresses to large crowds included details of the missionary work he undertook among sailors – regarded at the time to be an ungodly bunch.

A contemporary account of his life reads as follows: "As a young man, according to his own testimony, he was 'as wild as anybody', but for half a century he had been identified with temperance work, and the religious instruction of the seafarer.

"But the special work with which Cookie's name will be handed down to posterity was his regular attention to the wants of Sunday school children, and the wonderful affection which existed between him and the last two or three generations of little ones of the east part of Folkestone.

"Every Sunday morning he had a certain round which he took for distributing pictorial card, leaflets, and little books, and the anticipation of this visit each week might have been seen by the children waiting at their respective doorsteps to greet Mr Cook, and to receive the little gift and cheery words of the kind old man – many of the children always clinging round him on his journey through the streets."

He was also celebrated in the words of a Folkestone folk-song...

A truly kind old man is William Cook,
For 40 years he's loved the Good Old Book,
His youth and strength were spent in doing good,
To cheer and bless, he's done whate'er he could.

After his death from cancer in 1888, the Union Flag was flown at half-mast over the Town Hall and hundreds of mourners attended his funeral.

The inscription on his gravestone – which also commemorates the life of his wife Mary Ann who died in 1914 aged 95 – reads as follows:

In Loving Memory of William Cook 'Cookie'.
Native of Folkestone
The Children Friend
One of the Founders of the first Band of Hope in the Town he originated the Bible-Bag-Mission for Seamen
And Sunday Distribution of Little Books
Amongst Children.
He Went Home September 22nd, 1888, aged 72 years
And was followed to the grave
By upwards of 4,000 persons
He Being Dead Yet Speaketh

Heb XI. 4

His last words were: "The old valiant sailor is going to receive his reward. Home, home, home."

OPINION

Why you should care about PCC

Chief reporter Marijke Cox on why we all need to get engaged and take an interest as polling day looms for Kent's most powerful police figure HANDS up who knows what the Police and Crime Commissioner role is?

I'd lay a bet that not too many do, butthat's no criticism against you.

The reasons why, however, are not very clear. It's either the lack of publicity or simply that people don't really know enough about it to care.

But people should care. I can't dress this up and pretend the PCC process is exciting, in fact if it wasn't for my job I would perhaps be guilty of not taking much of an interest, but what I can say? Something that has been said by many before me: This is the biggest shake-up in policing in half a century.

The PCC is the person who will replace Kent Police Authority (KPA) and take over huge decisions such as setting the policing budget, setting the strategies and with the power to hire and fire the chief constable. And this person is to be chosen by us, the electorate.

So if we choose to ignore this and let the opportunity slip through our fingers we won't be able to moan if, heaven forbid, we end up with a power-hungry PCC selling off bits of our force or giving a good chief constable the boot.

We currently have KPA, an organisation which for years has worked quietly in the background monitoring Kent Police, setting budgets and tax levels.

But in November it will be dissolved and the work its committee once did handed over to one man or woman.

I cannot pretend to be an expert on the KPA, but I do know its members are elected by the authority. And there is a strong argument to say that an organisation deciding on how pubic funds should be spent should be more answerable to the public. The alternative will take that to the extreme.

Its replacement, the PCC, will be elected by us, with an extra trip to the polling stations just as winter draws in.

But elections brings politics to the table and party machines with their tireless canvassing and the risk people will vote out of habit rather than the person who is most suited to the job.

And with the PCC in for a four-year term, if we elect the wrong person for this important role, we then have four long years praying there won't be too much damage done until we can get rid of them.

However, all this aside, from the predicted turnout figures and our own survey carried out this week, Kent will be lucky if many people even bother to go out to vote at all.

Some suggest a mere 15 per cent of us will make the effort.

Of course, this does raise the question whether to inject

If we elect the wrong person we have four long years praying there won't be too much damage some life into the contest someone with a real personality it needed to bring some much needed life to proceedings.

Love or hate Boris Johnson, everyone knows who he is, and I wonder if that is the only way to get people engaged in the process.

But that's a high risk strategy. The last thing this should become, after all, is a circus, but something needs to be done to make sure people get out there, take an interest, understand what the PCC involves and most importantly, vote.

Kent Police is struggling enough at the moment with deep cuts and the loss of hundreds of officers and 1,000 civilian staff.

We need the right person to help to lead the force through these tough times and the only way that will happen is if people sit up and take notice ready for the November election.

Once again, it's in our hands.

KOS COMMENT

Olympic Games are our golden moment

AFTER months of anticipation and planning, the Olympic Games finally kicked off this week.

And with the daily travel disruption and expected delays, it is easy to see why some may be counting down the days until it ends.

The advice is to plan ahead and leave earlier, but the hundreds of thousands of visitors descending on London will still have a huge impact on commuters.

But, as the eyes of the world are fixed firmly on us, let us not indulge in that very British passion of moaning and groaning and instead embrace a quite remarkable period in history.

All we need now is to win a few gold medals.

We're in safe hands

DESPITE the rise in serious sexual offences, the good news is crime continues to steadily fall, proving Kent remains, fundamentally, a safe and secure place to live.

The biggest fear now is whether with on-going cuts, our police can continue to fight crime on all fronts.

Seagull on the Royal Military Canal, Hythe

20mph zones are not safer

YET again there is an argument over possible further reductions to 20mph limits in towns and 40mph in the country.

There's just one hitch. Most of the arguments in favour of returning drivers to little short of a pre-1930 situation, centre on safety and accident, death and injury reduction.

It is now two years since several towns and cities started introducing blanket 20mph speed limits – so we have two years of accident statistics to study. Much has been made of the increase in accidents last year – but these figures deserve detailed study.

Those places with reduced speed limits and/or traffic calming, such as speed humps, most notably Portsmouth, Bristol and Oxford, now have the worst records in the country. Portsmouth spent more than £500,000 on their scheme, and saw a rise in killed and seriously injured (KSI): 38 per cent more pedestrians and 11 per cent more cyclists.

Although there was a 12 per cent reduction in KSI nationally, Portsmouth recorded a six per cent rise, despite a 12 per cent reduction in traffic within their 20mph zone. They also had more child casualties in the two years following introduction of the scheme than the annual average three years before.

In Bristol, overall casualties in the first year showed a net increase of three.

Oxford spent £250,000 on a scheme in 2009. Casualties rose by 10 from 2008-9; rising again in 2010 (latest available figures). The number of accidents (with KSI) also increased by seven in the following two years. I could go on – but the trend is clear.

The reduction of speed limits is a demonstrably failed policy that has been brought about by wishful thinking. Vast sums of money have been wasted – that could have been better spent on other safety measures, like road user education. By that I mean all road users.

How many times do we see cyclists flouting rules and pedestrians stepping into roads without paying the slightest attention – immersed in music or texting? Lower speed limits giving a false sense of safety? If they paid half the attention drivers have to I suggest we might see improved figures.

As for child safety, another fact often overlooked is that most child casualties do not occur outside schools, but elsewhere. That reduces the validity of calls to impose 20mph limits near all schools.

The Association of British Drivers has no objection to 20mph outside schools when needed – linked to the flashing signs most schools already have. But nobody employs a lollypop lady 24/7, to impose 20mph all day is stupidity.

There is another side to the speed argument that often gets overlooked. In 2008, the AA commissioned independent research resulting in the report Fuel for Thought – 20mph roads pump up CO2 emissions by 10 per cent.

In summary the result was that forcing traffic to travel at a low pace increases fuel consumption and emissions. That may have implications for air quality in 20mph zones.

A final word about our country roads. Blanket 40mph limits without repeater signs are a recipe for confusion and criminalisation of safe drivers. Rural lanes have functioned for decades as a "shared space" – without unnecessary regulation. Let them continue.

Ian Taylor
Association of British Drivers (Kent Branch)

Limits don't end danger

WE had a 20mph limit imposed in West Malling High Street after somebody was alleged to have been caught doing 60mph. They then abdicated responsibility to catch the speedsters and instead all of us now have to creep along at 20mph. The drivers who ignored the previous limit just disregard the new one, so no change.

Coupled with this, having lived in West Malling for some 40 years, I have to say I've yet to hear of a death or serious injury in the High Street due to somebody speeding.

Phil Granger, West Malling

Stop breaking the law now

NO doubt as a result of your story last week, there will be lots of people bleating on that dropping the speed limit will still see people break the law and it's only punishing the good, limit-abiding folk.

They will say the lawbreakers never get caught and pollution makes things worse.

They will, of course, be the same people writing letters about speed cameras.

For some reason we seem to think road laws are there just to annoy. Well if you break the law by going too fast the only person to blame is yourself. And if you're going so fast you cannot stop if someone walks out in front, the same applies, and on your conscience be it.

NO Estuary Airport

Airport will be too expensive

THE cost of a Thamest Estuary airport will be prohibitive.

Several figures have been mentioned in various publications which do not cover the cost of materials to be used for the entire base on which it would be located.

Thousands of tonnes of rock would be needed to establish the foundation. The project is an ego trip for Boris Johnson, with money from the taxpayer or foreign private investors wanting a healthy return.

Manston is the ideal location. There is space for an additional runway, terminal buildings, service hangars and parking. The M2 could be extended a few more miles for road access and a railway terminus constructed.

People knew the airfield existed long before they moved there. Modern aircraft are much quieter than of latter days, with much improved engines, less pollution, and rapidly ascend with a minimum of noise.

Perhaps we should ask the Eddie Stobart Group to take over and develop the airfield plus rail-link as they made a superb job at Southend, and it is a UK company. Local people would have stable employment in a sadly deprived area and it would be of great benefit to all in the region.

Ken Scrivner, by email

Please don't grow Manston

JUST what is the attraction of expanding Manston?

Who wants 24-hour noise, pollution and congestion?

In the main, people living around Heathrow are against any increase in flights. Think about it.

Shining a light on grey area of inheritance tax

TONY HETHERINGTON
MONEY CLINIC

Q WHEN anyone inquires about inheritance tax, you always advise that there is no tax on bequests from husband to wife or from wife to husband.

But then you say that anything else in the deceased's estate above £325,000 is taxed at 40pc.

I thought the rules had been changed some years ago so that the children took on both their parents' allowances, and tax then was not due until the estate topped £650,000.

Is this not correct?

A I THINK it is important to remember not everyone is married or in a civil partnership, nor does everyone have children.

Nonetheless, the point you are raising is relevant to lots of people.

The basic rule is that bequests between spouses escape inheritance tax. So does the next £325,000 left by the deceased. Tax then takes effect at 40pc. But what happens if the deceased left everything to his or her spouse, and did not use the £325,000 tax exemption? Or suppose they simply did not have £325,000 to leave?

In this case, any unused part of the tax-free band can be passed to the surviving spouse or civil partner.

When the second partner dies, the inheritance tax starting point for their estate will be increased to include the exemption that was not used on the first death. But exemptions cannot be passed on to children.

Q I DO not work for HM Revenue & Customs, but I think they get a bad press.

Most people who are in arrears with tax must secretly know they have been underpaying, but feel if they keep quiet they may get away with it.

If you earn, say, £17,500 one year and pay roughly £2,000 tax through Pay As You Earn, it is common sense that if you earn roughly the same next year, but from different sources such as part-time earnings, a company pension and a state pension, yet you pay no tax, then something is wrong.

A YOU are right. If someone's income barely changes, then the fact that it might come from different sources will make little or no difference. If income stays the same but tax suddenly drops to zero, the chances are that something has gone wrong. But how often does this happen?

What we have seen from HMRC is mistakes on a massive scale. Six million taxpayers overcharged. One million taxpayers undercharged. And in April alone, 12,000 people received penalty notices fining them £100 for failing to file tax returns – after those same 12,000 people had already been told by HMRC that they did not have to complete tax returns.

I do not tell many people this, but I once worked for HMRC. In those days, we would not have dreamed of telling a member of the public it was their responsibility to understand the tax system and to check their own PAYE deductions.

Today, sadly, this is the response I get from HMRC when I ask how a reader is supposed to find a lump sum to hand over because the tax office failed to collect enough.

Q I HAVE left a considerable sum to two young children, but the wording of my will suggests that if I die while those children are still under 18, my executors will have done their duty if they hand the money to the children's parents.

What can I do to avoid the money simply being spent on a luxury cruise for the grown-ups?

A SEE A solicitor and have the wording of your will changed so that it creates a binding trust, with the money invested until the children are old enough to receive it.

Q I KEEP receiving mail from HMRC, addressed to a Mr Taylor. The most recent letter came from a debt collector.

I have returned all these letters and explained that they have come to the wrong address.

I even rang the Revenue and the letters did stop for a while but then began again.

Who can I contact to put this right?

A COMPLAIN to the Revenue Adjudicator (0300 057 1111). She is an outside official who investigates alleged wrongdoing by the taxman.

Usually, her involvement is enough to sort things out.

Q IF I retire abroad, can I leave my savings here in a tax-free ISA?

A Yes, existing ISA savings are fine and will still escape UK tax, but you cannot add any new money while you are abroad.

Be sure to avoid pitfalls of 'accidental landlord'

If you choose to become a landlord it is of the utmost importance you tread carefully. ADAM AIKEN reports

By Adam Aiken
MyMoney24 editor

THE tight economic conditions of the past few years have seen a rise in the number of private landlords.

This has partly been down to a rise in demand from tenants who have found themselves unable to get on to the housing ladder.

But there has also been a rise in the number of "accidental landlords" – people who find themselves unable to sell their own homes so look to rent them out instead.

Whether you are actively looking to build up a portfolio of properties or are someone who has unwittingly joined the ranks of landlords, you need to take care. Even basics such as insurance need careful consideration – your existing home insurance policy will not be adequate (or even valid) for a buy-to-let property.

"We have seen an influx of more accidental landlords in recent months," said Carolyn Uphill, of the National Landlords Association (NLA).

"Often, these are homeowners who are struggling to sell their properties.

"These first-time landlords will frequently need advice and guidance to ensure they comply with the various regulations governing the letting of private-residential property.

"For example, they legally need to obtain a yearly gas safety certificate and also protect a tenant's deposit in one of three government-authorised tenancy deposit schemes."

Ms Uphill said communication skills and good organisation were also important for wannabe landlords.

"They must be able to communicate and advise their tenants appropriately in order to develop a good working relationship, but also possess the skills and knowledge to manage the financial aspect of their property," she said.

Rental yields vary across the UK, but the average is about six per cent. In other words, the average return on a property investment of £150,000 is £9,000 a year.

NLA chairman David Salusbury said: "There are currently a record number of people searching for rental properties, meaning would-be landlords would have no problem finding a tenant. Prospective landlords will need to remember they are effectively starting a small business.

"They must ensure they are well aware of the rules and regulations governing the letting of private residential accommodation."

CASE STUDY

Hasmita Reardon became a landlord 15 years ago, and today owns a portfolio of more than 70 rental properties in Kent. Here she offers tips for people looking to buy a property and then rent it out...

WHEN YOU ARE BUYING

- Shop around for a mortgage because interest rates, fees, deposits and criteria vary.
- Always consider the location of the property because you may need to sell it one day. Think about parking, schools and amenities.
- Haggle over the price. If you lose the property, don't worry. It is not worth paying over the top for investment property. This is not about buying your dream home.
- Consider the type of tenant you will be likely to attract. For example, buying a three-bedroom property in a village will attract families for the long term, while a third-floor city-centre apartment will attract a young professional couple or a single professional.
- Make sure your mortgage payments are affordable for housing benefit tenants. Even if you are looking for private tenants, they can lose their jobs or fall ill and be forced to apply for housing benefit.
- Don't expect to make money straight away. Renting is hard work.
- Buying near where you live means you can manage it yourself, and it makes it easier to deal with any problems that might arise and to do regular viewing.

ONCE YOU HAVE BOUGHT

- Consider joining local landlord forums and attend landlord meetings held by local authorities.
- Always keep a contingency fund in your bank account to cover at least three months' mortgage payments and money for maintenance.
- If you want to rent out the property without using an agent, join a landlord association such as the NLA. Make sure you become an accredited landlord, and learn how to issue correct documents to the tenants.
- Before you rent out your property, carry out credit checks on potential tenants, and ask for a deposit and a guarantor. Always get all documents signed at the start of the tenancy.
- You can end up with tenants who do not respect your property, so checks at regular intervals are vital.
- Try to build a good relationship with your tenants. A tenant worries about having a good landlord as much as a landlord worries about finding the right tenant.

Sophisticates need to act now if you want your money back

By Nick Ames
nick.ames@archant.co.uk

IF offered the choice of being "sophisticated" or otherwise, most people would probably opt for the former.

But, according to a leading financial analyst, in today's chaotic economic times, being non-sophisticated could well turn out to be no bad thing.

Nick Paterno of Sidcup based accountants McBrides thinks that SMEs who have found themselves financially crippled after agreeing to loans hedged by "cap and collar" restrictions are about to be recompensed – but only "non-sophisticated" clients will automatically be considered.

He said he feels the FSA's announcement that businesses effectively mis-sold this type of product can now claim redress from the big four – Barclays, HSBC, RBS and Lloyds – is good news for thousands of SMEs and could mean the difference between life and death for many trapped with crippling interest rates as a result of entering into these agreements.

Paterno, said: "Don't wait for the banks to act. If you are classed as a 'sophisticated customer' you will need to make your own application."

TAKE ACTION: Nick Paterno

The FSA deems "non-sophisticated" customers as those classed as lacking expertise and understanding of the product they were sold.

Not all businesses will be given redress and the amount will vary from customer to customer. It could include a mixture of cancelling or replacing existing products, together with partial or full refunds of the costs.

Paterno said: "We have seen many businesses fall on very hard times as a result of 'cap and collar' agreements. It is a very complex area and many firms entered into these type of loans without fully understanding the consequences and have paid the price.

"Most are stuck with paying unreasonably high rates of interest as a result of buying these products at a time when the economy is in recession and base rates are at record low levels.

"Firms need to look at their agreements and act accordingly if they want redress."

The FSA announced that it had found 'serious failings' in the sale of interest rate hedging products, but was overlooked by many firms as the Barclays LIBOR fixing scandal reached its peak. Worst affected are those businesses that signed up for this type of loan between 2005 and 2008, when interest rates were much higher. As rates have plummeted, the businesses have been left paying the higher rates.

Paterno added: "Most who signed up to this type of agreement thought they were protecting themselves against wide fluctuations in interest rates, but were given inadequate explanations of the risks."

The banks have agreed to stop marketing interest rate structured collars to retail customers and will provide redress directly for those customers that bought the most complex products.

In the past 11 years, banks have sold around 28,000 interest rate protection products to customers, which range from comparatively simple caps that fix an upper limit to the interest rate on a loan, through to the more complex derivatives such as "structured collars" which fix interest rates within a band.

Interest rate hedging products can protect bank customers against the risk of interest rate movements and can be an appropriate product when properly sold in the right circumstances, says the FSA. However, it found a range of poor sales practices, including poor disclosure of exit costs, failure to ascertain the customers' understanding of risk and sales being driven by rewards and incentives to staff.

The FSA's Martin Wheatley said: "For many small businesses this has been a difficult and distressing experience with many livelihoods affected."

AWARD

Public have final say on travel shortlist

DFDS Seaways has been shortlisted for the prestigious Best Cross Channel Operator Award and the Best Ferry Operator Award 2012 in this year's British Travel Awards (BTAs).

The Dover to France ferry company now operates routes to both Dunkirk and Calais. The Dover to Calais route was launched in partnership with LD Lines in February 2012.

Chris Newey, (pictured) passenger director for the English Channel at DFDS Seaways, said: "We are thrilled to have been shortlisted for both the Best Cross Channel Operator Award and the Best Ferry Operator Award 2012. 2011 was a great year for DFDS Seaways, which saw record growth for both passenger and freight business.

"With the launch of the Dover to Calais route, we have strengthened our offering and can provide up to 44 crossings a day."

All companies entered for an award were put before a core selection of industry professionals, who whittled the nominations down to the list of final nominees. The next stage sees the shortlisted firms put before the public vote.

TAX

Rates cut for firms hit by high street cobble works

BUSINESSES in Ashford's Lower High Street are to get a reduction in their business rates as a result of disruption during recent works.

The Valuation Office has announced a 20 per cent reduction in their rates for the period of time covering recent re-pointing works.

The work by Kent County Council to re-point the cobbles in Lower High Street has resulted in the market being moved and significant screening being put in place. Since work began, traders have been affected by a reduction in footfall, increased noise and disruption in deliveries due to the road access being closed.

The move comes after lobbying of the Valuation Office by Ashford Borough Council and the Town Centre Partnership.

The rate reduction will be effective for the entire period of the works. Those eligible for the rate relief will be contacted by the Valuation Office directly.

Economic development manager, Andrew Osborne said : "Ashford Borough Council and the Town Centre Partnership have worked hard to try to mitigate the impact of the Lower High Street works on our businesses.

"We are pleased that affected businesses will benefit from a rate reduction."

Raise your glass to one of the world's finest beers

By Nick Ames
nick.ames@archant.co.uk

A NEW English beer made by a Kent winemaker has been named as one of the world's best lagers in the brewing industry's equivalent to the Oscars.

The annual International Beer Challenge – which has been judging the world's best beers for the past 16 years – has awarded the ultimate accolade of a gold medal to Chapel Down vineyard, near Tenterden, for its Curious Brew premium lager.

The vineyard bought its wine making techniques to the table to create the beverage, which is a reaction to bland tasting brews which dominate the market, according to its creators.

The prestigious annual competition attracts entries from the world's largest breweries as well as microbrewers.

This year, judges tasted more than 400 beers before declaring the Kent winemaker's lager to be the best of its class.

The competition deemed only 30 beers, from countries including Belgium, Germany, Italy, New Zealand and the USA, to be of gold-medal standard. Curious Brew was one of only three lagers globally to be awarded a golden gong.

US brewery Samuel Adams – whose beers are being marketed by Shepherd Neame – picked up the other two lager gold medals for its Double Bock and A Dark Night in Munich.

Chapel Down, which only started brewing beer two years ago, uses East Anglian malt, saaz and cascade hops.

The whole process is overseen by Frazer Thompson, Chapel Down's chief executive officer, who previously held senior jobs at Heineken and Whitbread. He said: "We've changed people's minds about English wine and now we want to do the same when it comes to lager.

"Mass-produced lagers have the aroma of market research rather than hops. We've worked really hard to craft something more fragrant and more refreshing than other beers when served cold.

"We started brewing beer as we sell all the wine that we produce and our customers were asking for more product. We deliberately avoided cask ale and turned to an area of the market which needed refreshment – lager.

"Our beer is fermented using Champagne yeast and a late hop dosage adds a blast of flavour. So it's a beer totally unlike the usual corporate cardboard."

Pubs including the Five Bells at Brabourne; Three Tuns, Sittingbourne; and White Hart, Hythe, all stock the beer, which is also on sale in Jamie's Italian restaurants.

MP visits expanding business park

A BUSINESS park built on what was once the site of a former railway station has celebrated the latest phase of its expansion, with Tunbridge Wells MP Greg Clark opening two new units.

Hawkhurst Station Business Park has grown since the old railway station closed in 1961 and is home to a number of companies.

To celebrate the latest phase of development, owner Peter Dunlop welcomed Clark and more than 50 guests to a site which has become one of the largest centres of employment in the region.

Also present was design and build specialist Directline Structures, which has been responsible for much of the development.

Dunlop, who runs his own business, Kent Woodware, from the site said: "I'm the third generation to run the business. My grandfather started the firm in 1911 when he rented land here. We used to manufacture wooden components for the bedding, brush and tool handle trades.

"My father bought the site when the station closed in 1961 and when I joined in 1966, trade was booming, while the business park was also attracting other traders."

Clark applauded the Dunlop family for its "commitment and dedication" to creating and managing a business park which has continued to provide valuable employment opportunities for the people of the Weald.

Duncan Murray, managing director of Directline Structures, said the new units had been designed with the needs of each tenant in mind: "The buildings are also very environmentally-friendly. For example, sustainable drainage measures mean very little rainwater runs off the site, helping minimise flood risks in the area and also returning valuable water to the earth to replenish dwindling supplies."

The new units are being occupied by two companies already operating from the site. Family-owned importer and distributor Maws Fine Foods needed larger premises to expand.

Desserts manufacturer Rhokett is a multi-million-pound business founded in 2002 by leading patissier Martin Dockett with support from celebrity chef Gary Rhodes.

A skilled team of pastry chefs specialises in the manufacture of premium-quality desserts, sorbets, ice cream and iced specialities which are supplied to blue chip customers across the UK.

Duncan Murray said: "Maws has moved into the new unit from the old engine shed, while Rhokett is expanding from another unit we built five years ago. We will now extend the engine shed before another business on the park moves in there. Phase three of the estate is expected to commence soon."

TRANSPORT

Trains cash in on changes to our holiday preferences

EUROSTAR, the high speed rail service between the UK and mainland Europe, has reported continuing growth in passenger numbers and a "resilient performance" in sales revenues in the first half of 2012.

In the first six months of the year, passenger numbers rose by two per cent to 4.8 million from 4.7m in H1 2011. Sales revenues remained robust, growing by one per cent to £425m in H1 2012 from £421m in the same period last year.

The growth over the first half of the year has been driven by leisure travel as customers on both sides of the channel continue to enjoy leisure breaks.

Business travel, which was broadly flat in the first quarter of 2012, weakened in the second quarter as the number of public holidays and the eurozone crisis impacted on many business customers' travel plans.

Nicolas Petrovic, chief executive of Eurostar, said: "We have delivered a resilient performance in the first half of the year despite the difficult economic climate. Leisure bookings have continued to grow and we have seen good take-up for travel to London over the summer period.

"During the jubilee we had one of our busiest weekends on record and we are looking forward to welcoming visitors from across Europe to enjoy all the attractions London has to offer.

"While leisure sales have held up over the last six months, there is no doubt that corporate clients and business travellers, particularly in the financial services industry, are feeling the squeeze and cutting back on their travel budgets as they adapt to the economic environment.

"The combination of economic pressures and the London 2012 Games has meant we are seeing different travel patterns this year. The traditional European summer close-down for business is kicking in earlier as all eyes turn to the Olympic celebrations in London."

Training, courses and careers

Apprentice sweeps the board when he aims to build for brighter future

JORDON Coleman has been chiselling out a name for himself in recent months, after scooping the prestigious title of Kent Apprentice of the Year, and he is now looking to knock-up more success at the national finals.

The apprentice bench joiner has dazzled after working for Canterbury-based Cardy Construction.

He recently took the accolade of Best in Kent 2012 in bench joinery.

And as if this considerable accomplishment was not enough, Jordon was also runner up in the joinery division of the South East England Skill-Build regional heat competition for trainees in the construction industry and now goes forward to the National Apprentice Finals later in the year.

Canterbury-educated Jordon joined the Cardy team when he left school in August 2010.

He enrolled as part of the construction skills scheme at Canterbury College to pursue his chosen career as a joiner. The varied nature of Cardy's bespoke joinery department enabled Jordon to take full advantage of his enthusiasm for the job and – supported by a team of colleagues – he has already cemented his position within the workshop.

Jordon held off stiff competition to win the awards, which are acknowledged and supported by the main construction skills colleges in the county and Cardy is pleased its commitment to training and the apprenticeship scheme continues to pay dividends.

The company trains most of its workforce and currently has six other apprentices in various trades now eager to challenge Jordon, 21, for the company's own Best Apprentice award.

Stuart Gremo, managing director of Cardy, said: "He is a great lad and has proved himself in so many ways. I am sure he has a great future ahead of him. He excels at everything thrown at him.

"He scooped all the local Apprentice of the Year awards which are sponsored by colleges throughout Kent, and came second in the Best Apprentice/Trainee Awards for the whole of the south of England and now goes forward to the National Finals later in the year."

Jordon's Best in Kent 2012 for bench joinery is in association with Thanet College, North West Kent College, Canterbury College, MidKent College and K College.

Electricians learn the finer details of renewables

ENGINEERS at MidKent College are responding to the threat of climate change with a new focus on renewable technology.

From this September students who enrol on the Level 2 diploma in electrical and electronic engineering course will tackle new units covering subjects such as wind and solar energy.

This is in addition to existing units that focus on welding, fabrication and more.

The college said it realises just how important these skills will be for future generations.

Lecturer Stephen Row explained: "It is important our courses reflect the world our students live in, and at the moment it's one where people are desperately trying to reduce their carbon footprint.

"There is now a clear desire to use more renewable sources of energy as a result, which should open up thousands of new jobs for those qualified to work in the relevant industries.

"MidKent College is dedicated to teaching its students the job skills employers today are looking for, so the decision to introduce these new units was an easy one to make."

The diploma in electrical and electronic engineering is a practical, work-related course that also helps students qualify for work in electronic production and the technical services field. Other units include working safely in engineering, mathematics for technicians, operation of mechanical systems and more.

Scholar nurses a passion for great garden designs

A PROMISING garden design student has won a major scholarship.

Melinda Diamond, pictured, became a Hadlow College BA honours student and has now been awarded the 2012 Anne Wright Scholarship.

It entitles her to spend six weeks at the late Christopher Lloyd's garden at Great Dixter, where she will be able to feed her passion for the Arts and Crafts Movement alongside head gardener Fergus Garrett.

Melinda, a practice nurse by profession, has just completed her second year at Hadlow and is excited by the prospect of working within this iconic garden. She is also looking forward to learning how Great Dixter is managed and how Christopher Lloyd's globally-recognised work continues to evolve year-by-year.

She said: "By chance I will be 'between jobs' this summer so it is an ideal moment to take time out to do something special for myself, which I feel sure will enhance my future plans to work as a garden designer. My now adult family all encouraged me to apply."

An official award ceremony took place at Great Dixter, the rambling Sussex manor which was the family home of Christopher Lloyd, one of the most inspired plantsmen and garden writers of the 20th century.

The house and gardens are open to the public until October 28, entry charges apply.

Visit www.greatdixter.co.uk for more information about the house and gardens.

Children experience joy of animals

THE Aspinall Foundation continued its valuable education work by taking a group of Chernobyl victims around its Port Lympne animal park.

The Chernobyl Children's Lifeline, known as CCLL, paid a visit to the park near Folkestone as part of a programme offering children affected by the nuclear disaster recuperative holidays while teaching them about the value of animal care and breeding.

Adrian Harland, animal director, said: "It is always a pleasure to welcome the children from CCLL, they have all been affected in some way by the Chernobyl disaster and it's a pleasure to give them an enjoyable experience."

This was the third year a group of children from CCLL have visited the wild animal park and this year they were joined again by actress Rula Lenska, a passionate supporter of animal charities, who first introduced the children to Port Lympne.

Rula said: "As always, the welcome and the magic of the wild animal park will stay in the minds of these special children for many years.

"The privilege of being able to hand feed the lemurs was a particular joy and when we were on the safari the gorgeous giraffe who came to have a closer look thrilled me and the children.

"On behalf of them and myself I thank Port Lympne with all my heart for giving these children an unforgettable experience. Port Lympne is a special place, full of special animals and special people who look after them."

CCLL is a charity that supports children and families in Belarus and Ukraine, the countries most affected by the Chernobyl disaster. Recuperative holidays are just a small part of the help that they provide. The charity also delivers humanitarian aid, provides holidays in Belarus for disabled children, sets up projects to improve the lives of children with disabilities and provides training, practical and financial support to promote the development of palliative care.

Shortlist recognises good learning

A STORE manager has been shortlisted for Retail Learner of the Year, meaning she gets the chance to meet retail entrepreneur and TV Dragon Theo Paphitis at a star-studded ceremony in central London.

Rickie Strevens, 33, from Swanscombe, was unemployed for three years when she signed up for an eight-week introductory Retail Works course at The Learning Shop, Bluewater.

Impressing her tutor with her tenacity, drive and enthusiasm, the course gave Rickie the insight and confidence she needed and helped her secure a permanent full-time position at Mr Simms Olde Sweet Shop in Bluewater. Within months, Rickie was promoted to store manager. As a reward for her hard work and incredible journey, Rickie has now made the shortlist for the Skillsmart Retail Rising Stars Awards, run by Retail Week.

Rickie said: "The training enabled me to find the confidence to resume looking for employment."

The Skillsmart Retail Rising Stars Awards recognises and celebrates up and coming talent in all areas of retail, from apprentices just starting out in the industry to buyers and marketeers at the top of their game. All must demonstrate the outstanding aptitude and initiative that singles them out as ones to watch for the future.

The ceremony at Grosvenor House Hotel in London's Mayfair will take place on September 5, and will see winners walk away with one of 17 prestigious Rising Stars trophies. These winners will then be in with a chance of being the overall Rising Star of the Year.

THE BEST: Students at Canterbury College are celebrating once again having the UK's top Students' Union

College union wins gold, again

THE Students' Union at Canterbury College has once again beaten colleges across the country to become the best in the UK at the NUS Awards.

It was voted best FE Students' Union at the awards ceremony at Exeter University.

The victory continues the college's record breaking run at the awards. It is the fifth consecutive year Canterbury College's Students' Union has finished in a top three position – a feat unmatched by anyone else. It previously won the award in 2010.

Union manager Tony Payne was delighted with the win, he said: "I'm completely blown away. It's such an achievement for us now that we've been in the top three for the past five years. To be winners again is a huge credit to the students and shows the quality of what we do. We continue to keep the bar really high."

In the past year, the union has arranged more affordable bus travel to college for students, spearheaded the national Blue Monday campaign, was involved in the international Peace One Day campaign and has held a series of Olympic-inspired events that promote the values of the Games.

Judges for the awards included Google industry leader Paul Coffey, Sky Sports News presenter Rob Wotton, Spotify's UK managing director Chris Maples and Martin Doel, chief executive for the Association of Colleges.

Raechel Mattey, NUS Wales Deputy President, praised Canterbury College's Students' Union, adding: "It has a strong relevance to students and puts them at the heart of what they do. They're an excellent model of a college Students' Union and continue to go from strength to strength."

Getting active is now easier than ever as children can learn football

A NEW summer soccer school is taking place for youngsters in Medway.

All Saints Children's Centre and Chatham Riverside Football Club have teamed up to train youngsters during the school holidays.

The children are split into three age groups; four to six, seven to nine and 10 to 11.

The soccer school will run on Saturdays in the holidays – July 28 and August 4, 11, 18 and 25.

All of the sessions are at the Thomas Aveling School, Arethusa Road, Rochester, from 10am until noon.

Both boys and girls are welcome, with entry priced at £2 per family per week.

Medway Council's Portfolio Holder for Children's Services, Cllr Les Wicks, said: "The soccer school sessions are a great way to get active and have fun during the summer holidays.

"Not only are they affordable, but they are also open for the whole family to enjoy.

"There's plenty going on at all of Medway's 19 Sure Start centres this summer, which have once again gone that extra mile to give families a fun packed summer break full of affordable activities, many of which are free."

Parents can book for all or some sessions, but places are limited so early booking is advised. For more information and to book a place call 01634 338833.

THE INTERVIEW

Ruthless Richard brought to life

In his latest book Warlord, best-selling author Angus Donald reveals the darker side of legendary English King Richard I as Nick Ames discovers BEST-SELLING historical novelist Angus Donald, from Tunbridge Wells, is now on the fourth volume of his series concerning the exploits of Robin Hood.

Warlord is set in 1194, and sees Richard the Lionheart in Normandy engaged in a bloody war to drive the French out of his continental territory.

Using the brutal tactics of medieval warfare – siege, savagery and scorched earth – the king is gradually pushing back the forces of King Philip of France.

By his side are Robert, Earl of Locksley, better known as the erstwhile outlaw Robin Hood, and Sir Alan Dale, his loyal friend and great warrior.

Donald's Outlaw series has become a fixture in the best-seller lists and gained great reviews.

His Robin is charismatic and a great leader, but a much more complex man than is usually portrayed with a far darker side – not really a 'merry man' in any shape or form.

Fellow historical writer Robert Low called the works: "A ruthless, muscular history of England... a stunning portrayal of the dark side of the Robin Hood legend. This is the outlaw Russell Crowe should have played" while The Times newspaper called the books: "A glorious, gritty, violent fast-moving recreation of an English legend."

Whereas much debate has taken place over whether Robin ever existed there is no doubt about the reality of the latest book's 'co-star'.

King Richard I, whose statue on horseback with raised sword stands outside the Palace of Westminster, is one of England's most famous rulers. And he was very much a "man of his time" said Donald

"I think he was a hero, but he did some pretty terrible things," he said.

"But you have to put them into the context of medieval warfare which was a pretty bloody thing as warfare always is.

"One of the most famous incidents occurs in my second book Holy Warrior where Richard massacres 2,000 Muslim prisoners of war, women, children and old people.

"It occurred at Acre; he was stuck there with all these prisoners, but wanted to march on Jerusalem as part of the Third Crusade, but couldn't – so he killed them.

"There was an agreement to hand over the captives for ransom, a fragment of the 'true cross' (on which Jesus was crucified) plus a huge sum in gold.

"But (Muslim leader) Saladin realized Richard was pinned down while the negotiations were taking place. When the deadline passed Richard realised he was being manipulated.

"You could say Saladin broke his agreement, but it was still horrific. Richard lined up all these people outside the walls of Acre and had their heads chopped off."

When researching true historical figures such as Richard, Donald said he draws on authoritative works by historians as well as what he calls "optical research, a fancy name for going there and looking over the ground".

He said: "You think, these guys would have been charging over that hill, probably avoiding the supermarket.The ground often hasn't changed; you can see a valley, folds in the landscape and the remains of a wood which was once there."

WORD SMITH: Donald's series of books concerning the exploits of Robin Hood have been a big success

A couple of decades ago the character of Richard was attacked by revisionists historians and he was accused of – among other things – being a homosexual. This view was based on his having no children, enjoying male company and not being particularly good to his wife Berengaria of Navarre. He is also believed to have shared a bed with the King of France.

Donald does not agree with this assessment.

"Sharing a bed was common as there were not many to go around," he said.

"I think he was kind of a man's man. He did get married and didn't have any children which is unusual. But he wasn't a home-loving father figure. He was a warrior, a lord and a king and he spent most of his time trying to defend his land. And, I think, he adored fighting.

"As a person I think he would be inspiring, absolutely charismatic with an absolute belief in himself. He was reckless, but that came off so you see it as brave.

"In Warlord, at the Battle of Gisors, he had about 50 knights and was up against the whole French army of 600 to 700 men, including 300 knights and he just charged straight at them.

"And, of course, it worked. He was also very clever when it came to the strategic application of force. At Gisors he shattered the French line and then focused on the king and put him to flight. He was a risk-taker, but it paid off, more often than not.

"A lot of people were in some way entranced by him. He had his weakness; he suffered from chronic shaking hands which could have been a surfeit of adrenalin or even Parkinson's disease, we don't know.

"He also had a softer side, loving poetry and music. He was great patron of the troubadours, such as my character Alan, which is why they get on so well.

"He would have been quite fun to be with – but in that society. You wouldn't want him rampaging through Kent today. He was man of his times and a shining hero."

With historical and historical-based films and TV series currently hugely popular – from Russell Crowe's Robin Hood, to The Lord of the Rings and Game of Thrones – Donald has been in discussion to have his work filmed.

But nothing has come of the talks so far and no-one has bought the rights.

However, Donald thinks he knows who would be the best actor to convincingly put across his version of Robin Hood.

"Johnny Depp would be fantastic," he said. "He has got a good sense of humour and would bring alive the mischievousness of my Robin. But he could do the hard-stone cruelty as well. Plus he has got that charisma, so you could see why people followed him.

"And Richard? Ray Fiennes; he's got that sort of haughty, aristocratic thing. He was great as Voldemort in the Harry Potter series. He'd need a wig though."

■ Angus Donald will be signing copies of his book at the Tunbridge Wells branch of Waterstones on Saturday, July 28 from 11am until 3pm.

Wingham Wildlife Park, So Much More Than Birds

The summer holiday season is once again upon Wingham Wildlife Park and it has been a very busy 12 months to ensure that there are plenty of new things to see and do at this Kentish gem. Locally it is often still referred to as, Wingham Bird Park something which the new owners Tony & Jackie Binskin continue to try and change. "Lots of people are still shocked when they return to us and find that we are so much more than birds now," Tony explained, "there has been a big shift over the past 4 years to animals which deserve our attention for conservation reasons and this has encouraged us to bring many different big cats, primates, reptiles and more to Wingham."

This shift in the animal collection at Wingham Wildlife Park can be easily seen by there being over 210 species in the park (more than any other wildlife park or zoo in Kent), a big step up from the just over 40 species in 2008. "We are very proud of the way our animal collection is growing and are happy to show people not only the species our visitors want to see in Kent, but also introducing them to animals which deserve their attention and which people need to be educated about," Jackie said of the newer species at the park.

Just in the last 12 months a number of species have been added to the collection including; Puma, black Jaguar, Mandrills, Nile Crocodiles, Lions, Cobras and more. However it is not only the species housed there which are causing a stir amongst visitors. Wingham Wildlife Park is becoming famed for its hands on approach as explained by Tony, "we feel like we have struck a perfect balance between ensuring that people are able to come and see the animals, while making sure the animals are kept in a way which ensures they are as happy as we can possibly make them." This can be shown by the breeding success which the park enjoys. This year they have welcomed babies of the following species in to their arms; Vervet Monkey, Capuchin, Rhinoceros Iguanas, Porcupine, Goats, Pheasants, Red Ruffed Lemurs, Ring Tailed Lemurs and more.

The hands on ethos of the park doesn't stop here however and while many of the walk through enclosures are well known and popular, visitors this year are able to get close to the Flamingos in their walk through exhibit.

The hands on encounter, which the park is known for has also been moved to the education centre which can also boast a very interesting natural history museum.

With so much going on at the park it is easy to see something new or which you might have missed on a visit just weeks previously, and as such Tony advises, "we encourage people to keep an eye on our Facebook page which is the best place to keep up to date with what's going on at the park, share photos and experiences, while also helping us name animals and being entered in to free competitions." Since the Facebook page was started 2 years ago over 7,250 people have already done just that.

If you haven't been to the park for a while it is certainly worth returning to what is not only a great place for families but also becoming a hot spot for local wildlife photographers, and while you are there see for yourself why they recently received a Trip Advisor certificate of excellence and were the most sought after attraction in this years Kent's Big Weekend.

Communism wins through as Russian eatery draws in diners

RESTAURANT REVIEW

FOREIGN food restaurants are not exactly my kind of thing, so this should make the CCCP Restaurant far from up my street.

However, just the name brings intrigue and mystery about it. After all, how many places to eat do you know which are named after a communist state?

This Russian-influenced restaurant has been open for about a year now, and brings in regulars as well as the curious.

Though having a real Russian influence on its menu (and its beer selection), every table has the quite-essential hammer and sickle flags just to add to the novelty.

The menu – which is also published in Russian and Lithuanian – has a good range of dishes and is relatively well priced too.

However, I opted for the special of a soup comprising of five Russian sausages with some gherkin and onion also in the mix. This may not be to the taste of everyone, but I thought it was rather splendid. Presented with a lemon and olive on the top and a slice of French bread on the side, this was a real treat for £4.50.

For those who don't want to delve into Russian classics so early on into a meal, my companion had cream of tomato soup.

Whilst waiting for our starters, and there was a bit of a wait, we had looked around at the décor which suited its Russian heritage with its tree leg tables and bar. There was also a rather loud Russian television station in the bar area, although the film was more Hollywood than Moscow as The Terminal (albeit with Russian translation) was being shown.

The wait for our main was somewhat shorter however, and two wild boar fillets with saffron sauce, potato wedges and salad garnish awaited me (along with another Russian beer).

This is on the higher end of the price scale at £11.50, but in a Russian restaurant it really is the stand-out option from the menu.

The meal was well presented, with attention to detail high on the agenda. The saffron sauce complemented the boar, although the wedges lacked any real flavour. However, the highlights outweighed the disappointment of the wedges, and I would recommend this unusual dish.

My guest opted for a pork fillet baked with cheese, and although on appearance it looked like a burger, it was tender and well received.

For dessert I again chose a special, honey cake. I have been to this restaurant once or twice before, and on those occasions, I seem to remember this was the special back then too. Never mind – it doesn't set the world on fire but it was an adequate end to a varied and rather tasty meal. My sidekick went for Vineyard – baked grapes with ice cream and fruit sauce, a sweet dish and surprisingly nice.

In a rather modest surrounding, CCCP is an affordable, cultural and a stimulating dining experience with friendly staff. Our total bill came to £50. Dean Kilpatrick

A taste of summer with top strawberry

CANTERBURY soft fruit grower Paul Kelsey of Kelsey Farms brought his award winning and aptly named Jubilee strawberries to the Marks & Spencer store in Whitefriars shopping district for a free tasting session.

Mr Kelsey, whose farm is at Wickhambreaux, concentrates on growing the Jubilee variety of strawberry due to its great taste, shape, colour and texture. He is convinced Jubilee strawberries are the best available on the market today.

For those who love great tasting Kentish strawberries the good news is that they will be in shops until the end of September.

Making the most of quality ingredients

TOP mustard and sauce brand French's have come up with a number of new recipes to incorporate their series of condiments and quality ingredients available in Kent.

Just a few of the new recipes include the local Farmer Palmer steak with French's steakhouse sauce or even the Romney Marsh lamb with the jalapeno and tomato relish.

There are also availble a wide range of sauces for salads. For the honey mustard dressing or the sweet onion relish can be used on Brogdale Farm apples and Faversham's new potatoes.

MANY acts born north of the border often try to deny their celtic tones instead opting for a transatlantic twang masking their Scottish roots, but not The Proclaimers.

Originating in Fife, Charlie and Craig Reid sing with their hearts very much on their sleeves, making them one of the most recoginsable pop groups in the world.

It's now 26 years since The Proclaimers released their first album This Is The Story, but the new wave, rock-pop duo have remained a firm favourite with many from both the UK and America.

The striking twins have enjoyed huge successes across the globe with memorable hits such as Sunshine on Leith, Letter From America, I'm on My Way, Life With You and Lets Get Married. Not to mention of course the infamous 500 Miles which has been recreated and adopted by comedians and football teams globally.

The pair will perform at The Marlowe to coincide with the release of their new album Like Comedy.

A new installation will be exhibited at the Blake Gallery in Gravesend this month.

The Art of Movement project exploring sound, movement and art was created and developed by digital and acoustic artist Peter Cook, movement artist Michelle Boakes and visual artist Wendy Daws in collaboration with students from Ifield School and elderly residents from Edward Moore House. The project will focus on the body and its physicality, recognising that every body is different.

Digital artist Peter Cook said: "Curiosity demands a question of us and helps us to find out more. Experience allows a flow of ideas and memories to form. Uncertainty helps support rethinking and refining of ideas. I think it helps with openness and understanding."

Building you a great lifestyle

RECENT trends in property construction have seen some developers, like Berkeley Homes, place a greater emphasis on enhancing the onsite infrastructure and increasing the lifestyle facilities available to residents across their developments.

In a competitive housing market, house buyers are looking for more than just a home, and instead are favouring sites that are well equipped with a range of amenities, and which have the facilities to establish a thriving community too.

Company director Tina Dedman said : "As a developer we are committed to building homes and communities for the future. Consequently, where possible, we are investing in the necessary infrastructure and incorporating facilities that will not only enhance the residents' quality of life, but help to cultivate a strong sense of community too.

"Our development, Holborough Lakes near Snodland, is a prime example of this in practice. When creating the site, we had access to 47 acres of developable land and saw a prime opportunity to implement the foundations for building and creating a sustainable community, and as such we are able to offer residents access to a village hall, a village green with trim trail, residents only gym, onsite crèche, estate manager, and even an eight acre clear water lake which is home to a leading diving and water sports academy.

"Our properties are priced competitively with a view to attracting growing and established families and, as such, we have endeavoured to ensure we have the necessary infrastructure in place to accommodate their lifestyle demands. We chose to make provision for an onsite nursery, which is intended to be both convenient for parents, and to help the children integrate and form friendships with other children from the development."

As well as gyms, crèches and village halls, developers are also looking to maximise the pre-established facilities in their developments' vicinities, and in the case of Holborough Lakes, this includes an onsite diving and water sports academy.

Ms Dedman added: "We're lucky enough to have an eight acre freshwater lake complete with established dive centre at Holborough, and have worked with the centre to encourage residents to take part in the activities available so close to home. "

Holborough Lakes development consists of a collection of two, three, four and five bedroom houses and one and two bedroom apartments. Prices start at £169,950.

Heads will roll if you want

LUCY'S PATCH

by LUCY HEWETT

HOLIDAY time is here... we've spent all year getting our gardens just right so we can go away when everything looks its best.

I think this every year when I am planting all my veggies – these will be ready when we are away but at least the dog sitters get to enjoy them. If you are going away do try and get someone in to water and pick your, veg it will be a shame if it has all gone to seed before you have a chance to enjoy at least some of your crop.

Talking of crop there, seems to be rather a lack of cherries this year; I can't believe we don't even have one cherry left on our 25 trees in the orchard as the starlings ate them all before they were ripe – I didn't get to taste even one.

They are rather large trees which were here when we moved in 15 years ago, not like the smaller root stock they plant these days which are much easier for picking and pruning so we don't even attempt to net ours, my only bird scarer is my daughter running around the orchard banging a tin tray.

Other things in my garden I do have slightly more control over; but even so every year I am still amazed at just how out of control some plants get, perhaps taking up more room than anticipated, crowding out other plants.

One thing writing this article has done is made me take photographs of my garden at different stages of year and this I would recommend doing to note any gaps or congestion that you'll want to rectify later in the season when everything has gone over, ahead of next year.

Normally at this time I would be emphasising the watering but I don't think I will have to worry this year as everything is as green and lush as it was in May.

Jobs to do

As flowers go over deadhead regularly to encourage longer flowering into autumn and generally to prevent the garden looking too messy.

Leave rose heads if you want them to form autumn hips. Pick leaves off plants affected by rose black spot and rust and don't put these in your compost bin. A rose I would highly recommend is Rosa Compassion, the hybrid tea flowers open from high-pointed buds to a ruffled mix of pale pink, apricot and orange, plant it near a walkway to make the most of its glorious scent.

After you have cut some lavender for drying trim the bushes immediately after flowering to maintain shape but not into old wood.

Summer prune wisteria, shortening side shoots back to five or six leaves.

Collect seed from plants you're planning to reseed and those you don't want to reseed themselves. Hollyhocks and daisies self-seed madly in my garden but I am quite happy about that.

If you've not already done so, buy bulbs for autumn planting including tulips, narcissus, alliums, iris and crocus. Also while you are at it order spring flowering bulbs. Plant nerines.

Trim conifer, privet, laurel and other evergreen hedges.

Prep soil for laying turf or sowing seed during September and October.

Don't cut off flower heads of ornamental grasses as these will provide winter interest.

Support your dahlias, lilies and gladioli with stakes and flower hoops to ensure the weight of their lovely flowers doesn't cause their stems to break. A dahlia I would highly recommend is Chat Noir – a real prolific, long-life vase beauty with burgundy petals and lime green centre and I have never had to lift it in winter.

In the fruit and vegetable patch

Pick off lower leaves from tomatoes to allow light and air to reach the fruits. Feed with liquid high potash fertiliser.

Sow parsley and winter lettuce to allow time to establish in time for a winter supply.

Order garlic and onions for winter planting.

Lift and pot up rooted strawberry runners.

Pick herbs for drying.

Plant out leeks and brassicas, if you haven't already you can also squeeze in a final sowing of spinach and chard.

Also sow basil, marjoram, borage, chervil, chives, coriander, dill, and parsley in pots outside to make moving them indoors as easy as possible in the late autumn.

Harvesting: cucumbers – I have always found Burpless Tasty to be an excellent variety, known for being easy on the digestive system, you can grow them outdoors but I grow mine inside and they are, if anything, a little too prolific. If you do get overrun with them try making sweet cucumber pickle, I use the recipe from Sarah Raven's Garden Cookbook – I have even converted my cucumber-hating friend with it.

Whatever you do this summer if you are going away or spending some time in your garden at home enjoy it. We will hopefully get an Indian summer as the weather so far has been – although I don't like to grumble of course – rather disappointing. We're off to the French Alps where I will hopefully get to see and take lots of pictures of the beautiful mountain flowers there and, fingers crossed, not see too much rain.

BEAUTIES: Deadheading prolongs flowering; Verbena bonariensis; se;f-seeding hollyhocks

Look out for wildlife

IN what is becoming the worst year on record for butterflies, Sir David Attenborough has urged people to join the biggest count of the winged insects in the world.

The wettest April for a century and the dampest June on record has left lepidopterists despairing about the fate of Britain's 59 species, almost three quarters of which are in decline and one third in danger of extinction.

Launching the third Butterfly Conservation Big Butterfly Count, which ends next weekend, the biggest citizen science project of its kind in the world, Sir David said it was more important than ever to discover if butterflies are dodging the downpour.

The count, in which people are asked to record online all the common species they spot in a 15-minute window in their garden, will alert conservationists to the species most in danger so efforts can be better targeted to prevent their extinction.

Results should be posted to www.bigbutterflycount.org.

"The fact every single person can produce a statistic of real value is a great spur," said Sir David. "But let's not underestimate the spin-offs. Many people will for the first time start taking a careful and critical view of their surroundings. The butterfly count helps butterflies but it also helps natural history and eco-sensitivity in this country."

Conservationists fear this extreme weather will trigger local extinctions of rare species such as the heath fritillary, which only flies at 40 sites in Britain, some of the most important of which are in Kent.

But there are also concerns over common species and Butterfly Conservation hopes the count will reveal how the small tortoiseshell is faring after counts revealed a dramatic population slump for this once-common garden butterfly.

This summer may be the worst year for butterflies since records began in 1976. If butterfly sightings are lower than the sodden summer of 2007 it would suggest there are fewer butterflies than ever in the British Isles, as numbers have been in steady decline since the 1970s.

"Enthusiasts and scientists on the ground are rightly very concerned," said Richard Fox of Butterfly Conservation. "There's a real fear of it being an extremely bad year. Sun-loving butterflies are having to cope with some of the wettest, coldest and dullest spring and summer weather ever."

Prolonged wet weather prevents caterpillars from thriving and stops adults finding mates and laying eggs for next year's generation. Most butterflies need warm temperatures and sunshine to for energy to fly.

Conservationists are also asking people to look out for birds.

Summer bird feeding can be just as important as feeding the birds during the winter months, as it's a busy time of year for rearing chicks.

During the breeding season, more birds are competing for the natural foods available and with the loss of natural habitats over the years this can mean food supplies become scarce. Supplementary feeding can be a huge benefit but it is important to consider which foods are right at this time of year.

Wildlife Advisor, Martin George from CJ Wildlife offered this advice "Live mealworms contain lots of protein and are perfect for both adult and young birds during the summer. If you have limited space then choose a food mix that is rich in sunflower hearts and will appeal to the greatest number of species, such as our Hi-Energy No Mess. Be aware that some foods can be potential choking hazards for juveniles so foods such as whole peanuts should never be fed from a bird table – always use a specialist mesh feeder."

Walk into your stylish new wardrobe

ORGANISE My Home is the UK's largest retailer of ClosetMaid – offering innovative and affordable shelving systems for every room in the home.

The company says it can provide useful solutions to suit any space and help customers maximise the storage in their homes.

Re-organising a wardrobe needn't be a daunting task, say the firm's experts.

With ClosetMaid shelving systems homeowners can make the most of their space in a few easy steps and finally be able to find the outfit that always seems to be stuffed away in the corner.

At OrganiseMyHome.com customers will find pre-designed packages in a number of sizes to offer a range of solutions to create storage space for everything – from dresses to shoes and everything in between.

However, if space is not quite standard with sloping ceilings or other obstacles to consider, or perhaps you simply have a specific design in mind, householders can get in touch with the dimensions of their space and make the most of ClosetMaid's free custom design service.

A company spokesman said: "Our team will create a design for you and get back to you with drawings and a quotation to consider.

"From there you can place your order and have your new closet delivered to fit yourself with easy to follow, customised DIY instructions. Or you can ask about our professional installation service.

"The ClosetMaid system is very flexible.

"It will fix into existing enclosures, or you can mount it onto a wall and leave the system open, creating a feature out of storage, or place your own doors across the shelving to hide items away.

"The innovative and modern wire shelving is made from steel with a white vinyl coating. It's easy to install, requires no finishing or maintenance, is easy to clean and the ventilated design means air can flow and dust settlement is reduced.

"With prices for walk in wardrobes starting from just £219, you can get the system that fits to you and your home without breaking the bank."

Optimise your storage space with real style

CHANGING the wardrobe in your bedroom can quickly add a new look to the room and give it a fresh feel for the summer months.

Providing the perfect backdrop for effortlessly cool bedrooms this summer, Ascent from Sharps is a range that's sure to add a real touch of glamour to your home.

Combining white and ivory gloss doors, the effect created is quite unique.

Each door is composed of three panels, alternating in colour between ivory and white. The ribbon-like panelling adds a dramatic touch to the room and, making the most of this enduringly stylish neutral palette, the pattern of the doors really catches the eye and adds interest to the room.

Sharps also has a solution for a child's bedroom. At every stage, little people need space that incorporates clever solutions to ensure all of their toys, clothes and books are stored neatly – leaving them with plenty of space to play in or just chill out.

The company has developed the new Flexispace – a range of flexible internal storage solutions designed around your child and adaptable as they grow.

Prices for a fully fitted Sharps bedroom start from £1,800, including design, manufacture, delivery and installation.

Mortgage risks if flood agreement ends

A QUARTER of the properties in the UK at risk of flooding could be left uninsured, leaving lenders exposed to a potential £214 billion of blighted property, says new research.

According to a report from property data experts xit2, lenders could be left at risk as mortgage borrowers find themselves unable to secure insurance against flooding when the "Statement of Principles" agreed between the Government and the insurance industry expires in June next year.

The statement was drawn up to protect homeowners by offering insurance deals in the wake of flooding, which was exceptionally severe in Yalding and other mid-Kent villages.

But its ending could mean property owners are unable to insure their properties as insurers become unwilling to offer policies which expire after the principles agreement.

The problem has been made more acute because of the recent heavy rainfall.

The end of the insurance cover leaves lenders' mortgage books exposed to property at risk of floods where there is already a mortgage in place.

COSTLY: If the insurance agreement is allowed to end then homes at risk of flooding could become uninsurable

"No insurance equals no mortgage," said Mark Blackwell, managing director of xit2. "This means the only people who'll be able to buy property at risk of flooding will be cash buyers – prices will plummet. It is vital lenders are able to identify properties at risk before they value it and grant a mortgage. Failure to do so exposes them to potentially blighted property and will increase the risk in their mortgage book.

"As the value of uninsured property falls, owners will be left in negative equity. It's a real booby trap for buyers, surveyors and lenders."

Uninsured properties could leave owners in breach of their mortgage contract. The end of the agreement also leaves surveyors exposed to a rise in overvaluation claims, where lenders feel the surveyor has been negligent and not taken flood risk into account when valuing the property on their behalf.

The Association of British Insurers estimates the 2007 floods cost more than £3bn and the average bill to repair a flooded property is more than £30,000. Around £300m is spent on flood defences across the UK every year but 43 per cent of defences are in fair, poor or very poor condition.

Particular "at risk" areas in Kent include Sheppey and the North Kent Marshes, Romney Marsh, the Medway around Maidstone, Deal and Sandwich and parts of the Stour Valley.

MATCHMAKING doesn't come better than this – marrying Alfa Romeo's delightful MiTo sports hatch with sister brand Fiat's feisty TwinAir petrol engine.

The award-winning turbocharged 85bhp 875cc twin-cylinder engine, launched in the Fiat 500, seems a natural match for the versatile MiTo – a name coined rather fittingly from abbreviating Italy's fashion capital Milano and motor city Torino.

And while the TwinAir engine broadened the masculine appeal of the 500, there will be male buyers only too delighted that it is now available in the chunkier and more spacious MiTo, causing Alfa to predict this new version will account for around 40 per cent of sales from that range.

And they won't only be buying the MiTo TwinAir for its nimbleness and lively performance – 0-62mph in 12.5 seconds – but also low benefit in kind taxation (10 per cent), the exemption from the London congestion charge and road tax that comes from just 98g/km of CO2 emissions, and an official 67mpg on the combined cycle. That compares with key figures of 0-62mph of 13 seconds, £100/year road tax (zero in year one) and 50.4mpg combined for the existing 1.4-litre MiTo entry model.

Mind you, the enjoyment of revving and driving the responsive and throatier TwinAir version is likely to eat seriously into that economy figure and reduce the benefit over the 1.4 normally aspirated version. Note also that TwinAir prices start at £14,150 against the 1.4's start price of £12,500.

On the other hand, the TwinAir may be the best partner yet for Alfa Romeo's excellent DNA system, which allows the steering and throttle response to be switched between D (Dynamic), N (Normal) and A (All-Weather).

The MiTo TwinAir is available in two trim levels – Sprint and Distinctive – priced at £14,150 and £15,350 respectively.

Standard kit at Sprint level includes sporty 16-inch alloys, cruise control, front fog lights, climate control, and Alfa's Blue&Me audio/comms system with Bluetooth hands-free connectivity and USB jack.

Trading up to Distinctive adds 17-inch alloys, red-painted Brembo brake calipers, rear parking sensors and chrome/aluminium detailing.

The Italian marque has also boosted its normal three-year unlimited mileage warranty to five across both current models – the MiTo and Focus-Class Giulietta – available until September 30, 2012.

What buyers also get is the most distinctively styled supermini in the sector; a three-door hatchback coupé that is practical and fun to drive; and a real antidote to the increasingly bland driving experience – and all at a keen price.

There is also no doubt that, as a model, the MiTo has heralded an upsurge in popularity for the Alfa Romeo brand.

Have Alfa created a marriage made in motoring heaven?

ATTRACTIVE OFFER: Alfa has boosted its normal three-year unlimited mileage warranty to five across both current models – the MiTo and Focus-Class Giulietta

...the price. On the face of it, you don't get much for an extra £1,650 over and above the entry model MiTo, but it's tax efficient and great fun.

NOT SURE

...Alfa Romeo is yet in the 'tried and trusted' category with UK buyers, but the cars do make you feel that any driving is a thing worth doing.

REALLY LIKE

...the partnering of Alfa style and excitement with one of the most brilliant and innovative engines on the market. Should be real a winner.

Chevy fun bus survives trials and tribulations of Cornish test

By Steve Loader
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

RATHER than asking how do you like your Cornish pasties, it can be a case of how does your car?

The West Country staple can be disastrous for the motor, with an outer casing able to explode with every bite, leaving greasy shrapnel everywhere.

Why not eat it outside the car? What, with the famous Cornish 'mizzle' enveloping you and the risk of gull attack? You must be joking.

But a pasty bomburst was just one of the trials our Chevrolet Orlando test car coped with during a week in the Duchy, crammed with four adults and two kids plus attendant wet and dry weather gear – ease of access to the two rearmost seats was a big plus.

I hadn't chosen the seven-seat Chevy by accident either; it impressed on a previous drive when I dubbed it the 'fun bus', not just for being named after the world's theme park capital – Orlando in Florida.

Spectacular value (from £16,825), a decent ride, space and comfort all recommended it, even if its Transatlantic lines didn't fit quaint Cornish backdrops, and there was little Florida-style sunshine to reflect off the gold Chevy grille badge.

But I like the muscular styling that makes it stand apart from more effete rivals.

And while it is a tad nose heavy and suffers from some of the body lean on corners that afflicts most MPVs, it is more likely to attract male buyers who normally have to be strong-armed into buying a people carrier 'for the sake of the family'.

It's hardly surprising how well it performs on the road, as it shares the same platform as Chevy's sharply styled middleweight saloon, the Cruze, and the impressive Astra hatchback from General Motors' (GM) stablemate Vauxhall.

Bosses at the latter brand won't be too happy though to have such a competent and keenly-priced rival to the big-selling Zafira seven-seater and recently-launched Zafira Tourer, in what is a crowded sector anyway.

Adding insult to injury, the versatility of the Orlando's seven seats is reminiscent of the Zafira sisters; conversion from full seven-up mode to flat floor cavernous van and all other permutations takes just seconds.

Cabin quality is also impressive, underlining strides the brand has made since Chevy parent GM acquired the failed Korean Daewoo motor operation a few years ago, but inherited some poor interior finishing.

But while visual and tactile quality can be sorted fast, design and ergonomics takes practice and the Korean-built Orlando could use more localised stowage, even if the boot is huge when the two rearmost seats are folded.

Mounting the front 12v power socket close to the handbrake and gearshift is one irritation, particularly if you have a game console or DVD player connected for a long journey.

On the other hand the concealed flip-up housing and socket for the iPod/iPhone on the dashboard is a stroke of genius.

On the power front, the 1.8LS petrol entry model will catch the eye with its start price plus usual Chevy five-year warranty, and get you talking to the dealer, but around £1,200 gets you into 2.0-litre diesel offering far better acceleration, fuel economy and resale value.

The diesel is available in 130PS (129bhp) or 163PS (162bhp) but there is a fag paper between them in terms of performance and economy.

Admittedly, the test car in flagship LTZ trim had the higher-powered unit (from £22,715) and coped well with the extra holiday loading and demanding Cornish terrain, but previous driving of the 130 version of the fun bus suggests this won't sell you short by much, while saving cash upfront.

TICKING ALL THE RIGHT BOXES: Sure to make a big impact on an already busy MPV sector, the Orlando performs well and is perfect for those with a large family

Body choice for new Leon

SPORTING Spanish brand Seat has unveiled a stunning third generation Leon family hatchback to arrive in late 2012 – and is promising a better cabin.

The previous car still has exterior presence, but an upgraded interior will be welcomed by dealers and would-be buyers, plus news that three-door and estate versions will be offered as well as a five-door this time round.

Get a Steed for just £1 deposit

BUYING the Chinese-made Great Wall Steed pick-up – the most affordable 4x4 double-cab pick-up on UK sale – has been made even easier by a new finance offer calling for a deposit of just £1.

In the case of the entry level Steed S model (£13,998 after tax deductions) that is then followed by 59 monthly payments of £285.06 (total £16,818.54).

Even safer and more pleasing

MAZDA has upgraded the world's best-selling roadster, the MX-5.

Versions due out soon have revised throttle and braking to enhance driving pleasure, plus a more aggressive front end treatment, while pedestrian safety is boosted by a new 'active' bonnet, which automatically raises the trailing edge of the panel to soften the blow if a pedestrian impact is detected.

LOOKING THE PART: Current Skoda line-up (left to right): Octavia, Fabia, Citigo, Yeti, Roomster mini MPV and Superb which will soon be joined by the all-new Rapid

Skoda keeps getting the last laugh

By Steve Loader
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

SKODA aims to close 2012 with a bang by boasting a further leap in sales and launching two all-new models.

The VW-owned Czech marque posted a record UK market share of 2.3 per cent in 2011, and is well on course to exceed that this year, helped by the recent arrival of the Citigo city car and a new Rapid saloon model by the end of 2012.

The former is a completely new departure for the brand, while the Rapid will fit into the current line-up above the Fabia supermini, allowing the Octavia hatch/estate family range to shift up in size when the third generation car arrives in 2013.

These alterations to the line-up will take the range to seven models, making Skoda a major player in the market and a long way from being the laughing stock of the industry during the Communist era.

Its new status as a modern motoring success story was underlined by domination of the recent AutoExpress Car of the Year awards, where the Citigo took overall Car of the Year 2012, and there were category wins for the Citigo (best city car), Superb (best family car) and Superb Estate (best estate).

Skoda also took the Driver Power Award again, with the Yeti SUV voted number one car for owner satisfaction.

Skoda brand director Alasdair Steward said: "To win the Driver Power Award for the fourth year in succession shows that we're doing a great job of keeping buyers happy."

The brand is on an impressive awards roll at present: 18 major awards in 2011, and eight awards so far this year.

TOPS: Jason and Kim with their new Citigo

Citigo's a winner

LAUNCHING the new Skoda Citigo was celebrated at this year's four-day Goodwood Festival of Speed, with a new car given away every day.

One of the lucky competition winners was Kent man Jason Chatfield and partner Kim of Hadlow, near Tonbridge, seen here collecting the car from Skoda dealer Caffyns of Tunbridge Wells,

General manager at the dealership, Mark Dunn said: "This adds to excitement generated by the Citigo. It's simply the right car for these times – a sensible car, well-priced (from £7,495) and cheap to run."

But he added, this didn't mean everyone was going for the cheapest model: "Two-thirds of our Citigo customers are trading up the range; they want a small car, but want the comforts of a bigger car, and to personalise it. The Citigo can do that."

CRICKET

England duo leading the way as next generation is tipped for a bright future

By Greg Miles
greg.miles@archant.co.uk

IT will be a proud day for everyone involved with Kent Cricket Club on August 11.

While some will be focusing on the following day's fixture against Derbyshire in the CB40, most will be wondering just how the county's young proteges Adam Ball, and Daniel Bell-Drummond are faring in the Under-19 Cricket World Cup in Australia.

Both will be key members of the squad, which Ball is captain of, and Bell-Drummond the star batsman.

One man sure to have a proud smile on his face is head of the county's high performance programme Simon Willis who as well as other staff, has overseen their development.

"It's a proud day for everyone," he said. "There are a lot of people involved in their development - we wish them all the best.

"Kent has always been a county that's wanted to produce players for international age groups. We've got a good track record as nationally we've had a number at under 19 level going back to Rob Key who was one of our earliest ones."

What's all the more pleasing is that those two are not the first to have emerged from Willis' setup. In recent years Joe Denly and Paul Dixey have made the big breakthrough.

And the list doesn't stop there with the likes of Sam Northeast, Adam Riley, Sam Billings, Chris Piesley, Matt Coles and Alex Blake being called upon for first team duties, having all been under the eye of Willis.

Willis believes it can be a bright future for the first team if those youngsters can be persuaded to stick around.

"All the time they have success other counties are going to be interested," he said. "We need to keep this group together, there's a group that could play together for ten years plus.

"All I can do is produce too many players and when they get into the first team environment Jimmy (Adams) and Keysey (Rob Key) can allow them to continue their growth. It's down to them to take those opportunites at first team level."

He praised Adams' approach to the second team setup and for giving the youngsters a chance when they've proven worthy.

"It's very easy I must say," he said. "He's shown good interest in what's underneath. Our relationship is going forwards in a positive way, he's very passionate about the game and he wants young players to be developed through the county system."

He pinpointed a number of small changes in recent years which have made a big difference in preparing players for the step up.

"I set myself three years to put an infrastructure in place to bring a few lads through and we are about getting to that stage," he said. "I'm very happy with how things are moving forward since I started in October 2009.

"It was subtle changes rather than revolutionary ideas, raising people's awareness of what's at first class level. The bar was a bit low before."

While he is happy players have played on merit, he admits there has been more of a chance in recent years because of the financial state of the club.

"The club has gone through a successful period, between 2005 and 2009, when there was less opportunity, but in recent years they've played their part because of the needs of the county.

"If we are realistic there has been a financial angle to it, the club has been through tough times, it's created opportunities but once players got in they took their oppopirtnities - Adam Ball played every game he was available for last year.

"The big step is when you get onto the professional staff, it can be quite a big step for some guys, you've got to have the character and mental strength to deal with it."

•England get their campaign underway against defending champions Australia on August 11, and then take on Ireland the following day before their final game against Nepal on August 16.

KENT PROSPECTS TO HEAD WORLD CUP CHARGE

ADAM BALL: Ball will have the proud honour of leading his country on the international stage, but it's not the first time he has been to the tournament. As a 16-year-old he represented the under-19 side on the world stage in New Zealand two years ago.

Back then he played a lesser part in the side having been called up as a replacement for an injured team mate, taking one wicket and making 22 runs as the young side went out to the West Indies in the Super Quarter Finals.

The talented all-rounder has been a regular feature for Kent's one day side this season taking 10 wickets in his last eight games.

He captained England at the Quadrangular Series in April and was his nation's third highest run scorer with 111, making him 12th in the list of top batsmen at the tournament.

DANIEL BELL-DRUMMOND: The 18-year-old will be a vital part of the England side in Australia.

His name would have been among the first on the list having first appeared for the under-19s as a 16-year-old, and having gone on to become England's all-time highest run-scorer in ODIs at under-19 level.

The opener made a huge impact down under in the Quadrangular Series in April, impressing with notable knocks in the side which was knocked out in the semi-finals by eventual winners India.

The hosts will certainly know what he is about as he hit an unbeaten 103 in a three wicket win over the Aussies in the tournament.

It's no surprise therefore that he topped the runs charts with 287 from the five games.

Australian athletes happy to call Tonbridge coffee shops home in preparation for the Olympic Games

GOLD: Sally Pearson is tipped for top spot

THE coffee shops of Tonbridge will have a lot to answer for if Australia sweep up in the medal stakes at the Olympics next week.

Some of the Aussies' top athletes have been scoping out the top cafes in the town from their base at Tonbridge School for some down time after their training sessions.

In particular the marathon runners have been spotted sipping cups of coffee after taking in the scenic routes around Penshurst in morning runs.

"There is a big coffee culture," said Jessica Trengrove, who is competing at her first Olympics. "The afternoons are free for us, we've found a few nice coffee shops, the people have been really friendly as well."

She is joined at the school by a host of gold medal hopes including Steve Hooker, who took gold in the pole vault in Beijing, 100m hurdler Sally Pearson, and long jumper Mitchell Watt.

Watt admitted he didn't even watch the long jump on television at the Beijing Olympics, but is hoping for a place on the podium at the London Games.

The 24-year-old said he was happy with the training camp at the school, and the support from the students as well.

"I asked for a fridge one day in my room and an hour later we had a fridge, they have been extremely helpful," he said. "I was training the other day and one of the students told me I looked a bit slow, so I ran a bit faster on the next one.

"I didn't even watch the long jump (in Beijing) which is a bit weird because if it was on now, even if I wasn't involved, I'd be up all night watching it. I think that sort of sums up my transition from a few years ago.

"When I was younger I'd have been excited about things like how much kit you get given, but when you get it now it's just another bump in the road and you know the real deal's in two weeks.

"I definitely think I can win the gold but I wouldn't be disappointed with a silver or a bronze. I want to be on the podium, and the higher the better."

Pole vaulter Alana Boyd, who is taking part in her second Games, visited the school last year.

"It's a great school and we are more than happy to be here. The facilities are fantastic," she said. "My main goal is to make the final and get close to my personal best, anything more than that will be a bonus."

Susan Boyd, section manager for the athletics team, hailed it as a perfect location for the athletes to relax and train in equal measure.

She said: "We think it's fantastic, everything is first class, the accommodation is good, the meals have been good, and the school staff have bent over backwards for us.

"We have got the mix right that they are not so bored, there is something to do here, but there are not too many distractions."

Flexible Strevens happy to assist in any role for Gills

greg.miles@archant.co.uk

UTILITY attacker Ben Strevens doesn't care where he plays as long as he's named in the starting 11.

The 32-year-old, who put pen to paper last week for a one-year deal, links up with Martin Allen for the second time in his career having played under him for a season at Barnet.

Also in his side at Underhill were Barry Fuller and Ross Flitney, while he and Lewis Montrose were promoted together at Wycombe Wanderers three years ago.

It was a key factor in his decision to come to Priestfield, but he knows he will have to fight for his place in the side with striker Adam Birchall coming back to fitness after a year out, and Danny Kedwell leading the club's scoring charts last season with 14 goals.

However, his adaptability could see him become a key part of Allen's side as he can play on either wing, as a target man, or main striker, and is more than happy to act as the playmaker for his team mates.

"I've played here, there and everywhere," he said. "If I'm playing up front week in and week out I like to think I can get double figures, and anything from there is a target.

"I always like to play in the hole, it's quite lucky I can do that. If I get in the team anywhere I will be happy. If I play in that hole I link play up, the main thing is you have got to work hard, hopefully I can pop up with a few goals."

With promotion a priority this year, Strevens certainly knows what it takes, having achieved the feat three times, at Dagenham and Redbridge, Barnet, and Wycombe. He pinpointed team spirit as a huge asset for a side gunning for the top, and knows new boss Allen will bring that to the side.

He said. "It's going to be the ones willing to work for each other who will come out on top.

"He's (Martin Allen) great around the place, everyday is fun, but it's going to be tough, he's good on his fitness and getting the team spirit together. I really did enjoy the way we played (at Barnet), all being well it's going to be a good season at the club."

FUTURE: Martin Dack hit 26 goals last year

Dack set to stay with Gills as youngsters get ready for men's game

MARTIN Allen has hinted that Gillingham youngster Bradley Dack, 18, could be part of his first team plans this year.

The midfielder was a stand out player in Darren Hare's youth team last season, netting 26 goals in total.

And it seems he has carried on that run, netting in the behind-closed doors game against Dagenham and Redbridge last week before hitting four against the Royal Engineers on Wednesday.

While Allen is keen to give some of the youngsters a taste of 'men's' football in non-league he isn't sure whether he can let last season's youth team captain Dack leave just yet.

He insists the door is always open for youngsters to force their way into his plans.

He said: "We had a little kid from the youth team, he (Dack) just kept scoring in training so we put him in the team, it doesn't matter if senior players aren't happy, it's the same from the goalkeeper to the centre forward.

"Old age might be a barrier, but we are open to all of it, there are some good young players here, we've got to incorporate them and bring them in.

"Some have got to go out on loan, there's a group in a few weeks time who will play non-league football, men's football, where it matters against men in the real world. We will review them again at Christmas."

When asked whether Dack would be one of those going on loan he said: "He got 26 goals from midfield, scored against Dagenham, nearly scored against Dartford, that's a tough one, I'm not sure we should get rid of him."

He also has three goalkeepers at his disposal with the arrival of Stuart Nelson on a free transfer, Tommy Forecast on a season-long loan as part of the deal which saw Paulo Gazzaniga join Southampton, and Ross Flitney who was injured for the second half of last season and is out for the next month with injury.

But Allen hasn't decided who his number one will be yet.

"I don't even know who's going to play in the team to be honest," he said. "He's (Forecast) a good goalkeeper, good presence, 6ft 5in.

"We will see how he does, if he's better than Stuart Nelson he'll play, and Stuart knows that, I don't care who they are, they'll play."

Perfect weekend as Shakey claims double win at Brands

SHANE Byrne has praised his team for helping him to double victory at his home circuit of Brands Hatch.

The Sheppey rider booked his place in the end of season Showdown rides by winning both races, for the first time this season, at the circuit.

The 35-year-old fended off a challenge from Yamaha's Noriyuki Haga and then the Suzuki of Josh Brookes in the opening race, and controlled the second race to win from Brookes and championship leader Tommy Hill to consolidate second place in the standings.

"A double victory is always good but to do it at my home circuit, in the sunshine and in front of a big local crowd is fantastic," he said. "We knew we had work to do after Oulton Park, and the team have worked their butts off to address the problems we had so they deserve this as much as anyone.

"We have scored some good Podium Credits this weekend and it's vital we continue that into Cadwell Park next month, as there's still a long way to go in this championship."

Byrne and Aussie rider Brookes confirmed their places as title fighters in the Showdown, joining defending champion Tommy Hill, meaning there are three places still available.

Michael Laverty in fourth has a 48 point lead over Tommy Bridewell in fifth, while Haga is sixth ahead of the next round of the championship at Cadwell Park on the August Bank Holiday.

But just 38 points separate Bridewell from 11th placed James Westmoreland with a total of 100 points still up for grabs before the Showdown.

Pembury ace is AutoGP champ with races to go

ADRIAN Quaife-Hobbs has won the 2012 AutoGP Championship with two races still remaining.

The 21-year-old from Pembury has dominated the 14-race series with five victories, and cannot be beaten whatever his results are in the final rounds in California in September.

He started on pole position in Brazil, his fifth of the season, but he had to settle for a sixth place after a wheel change cost him too much time.

He also endured a miserable second race which he failed to finish having led for 19 laps.

After taking the lead from the second row of the grid he looked good for the win, but he missed the braking point on entering the pits, meaning he clipped the grass and careered into the tyre barrier to end his race.

But it didn't matter as the Supernova Racing driver was crowned series champion with two races to spare.

"Naturally I'm very happy to have won the series, with two rounds remaining, but I really wanted to win the series with a race victory," he said. "Our pace in practice and qualifying showed that once again we were more than capable of doing that, but for a number of problems, we were denied that in race one. In the second race, everything was going really well but I just misjudged the braking on the entry to the pit lane."
